Restraining Influence

As the presidential campaign gets underway, the spending promises of candidates may be subjected to a restraining influence that stems from the far-reaching powers of two members of Congress--Wilbur Mills, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee and George Mahon who heads up the House Appropriations Committee. As Nation's business points out, "--the essence of political power--the power of the purse--is held firmly in the grasp of (these) two men."

Congressman Mills is credited with holding back the passage of a tax increase until there are substantial cuts in federal and nondefense spending. The state of the nation's finances has proven that even the United States can't fight wars, police the earth, build the biggest welfare state the world has ever seen and go to the moon all at the same time. As Representative Mahon points out, "--Right now there is too much emphasis on programs, programs and programs. The economists are always thinking of new programs to undertake. The deficit is intolerable. We have to diminish the spread between out go and income." He added that the most complementary label anyone can impose on Congress is to call it "do-nothing." Congressman Mills and Mahor may fairly be described as the bear friends the taxpayers have in Congress. And every voter should remember he has a secret weapon to help them guard the U.S. Treasury from free-wheeling congressional spenders--his vote.

A Lesson For Us

One of the Foundling Fathers of our country warned a long time ago that internal weakness might present greater threat to the perpetuation of our country than foreign military aggression. We have now had a first-rate example of how internal wreckage can wreck a nation. Within a space of 22 years following World War II, the British Empire disintegrated. The obituaries of Britain's decline have been documented in the world's press. What Hitler and his mighty armada were unable to accomplish--the extinction of Britain as a world power--is now a fact of history. From all accounts, the decline of Britain has accelerated largely to socialist leaders. The energy sapping philosophy of the welfare state which they advocated apparently played an important part in the rapid decline of British fortunes. U.S. citizens should take note that even the mightiest nation can be brought down by its own weaknesses--just as was predicted nearly two centuries ago.

MERCURY VAPOURS

by Warren R. Fisher

We know we puzzled several persons last week with our remark, "The Mercury's due because of a tornado."

About 7:30 a.m., last Wednesday we answered our phone; Warren J. Shonert of The Falmouth Outlook was seeking help, so we volunteered our forces. Falmouth of course had suffered a tornado Tuesday afternoon and was without electrical power, and we, luckily, were caught up with our usual Wednesday morning work. But if it hadn't been for an efficient staff of workers, neither paper would have made the mail on time.

Warren Fisher, Editor
Carlisle Mercury
Carlisle, Kentucky

Dear Mr. Fisher,
Words just can't express my gratitude for your kindness and assistance in helping me with our paper in this emergency. Without your aid we would have had no paper.

I am sending this candy as a small gesture of appreciation--please give one to your operator, who was so very cooperative, and there is one for you and your staff.

Again, many many thanks to you and your staff.

Sincerely yours,
Warren J. Shonert,

So far this week has been nothing but daylight slaving time.

If you know of a fisherman that likes to fish early in the morning, tell him Lake Carnico's dock is open by 5:30 a.m. There are boats to rent at reasonable fees and of course fish to be caught.

The Editor,
The Carlisle Mercury

I am interested in the picture that appeared in last Thursday's paper of the Ellisville School. My Grandfather's half-sister, Louisa Caughey and Rev. Enoch Samuel Hollar had several children, including Ida, Ollie, Minnie, Walker, Samuel E., Albert V., and Riven, who attended the Ellisville School between the years, 1895 and 1902. I wish someone could identify any of these children or others that were in the picture.

While I have been doing research during these years, I have seen and copied many little news notes about the activities of Rev. Hollar from old issues of the Mercury. They were reported in the Bald Hill Notes by the correspondent known as "Bon Ami."

My grandfather said that his brother-in-law was anxious to get some education that he went to school with his children, however, I am sure it was before this time that he did this because at this time, he held "protracted meetings" at Ruddle's Mill in Bourbon County and in Lewis County and assisted in the famous camp-meetings at Deering Camp Grounds at Parks Hill. He was a Methodist minister and preached one year at Murphy's Chapel, and at many other churches in Nicholas County, including Barterville, Blue Licks, and Mt. Mariah.

Going to the amusing from the sublime, one exciting event at the Hollar Place was reported by "Bon Ami" on June 9, 1887, that might be interesting to some readers, who may have heard the story in their childhood: "Our community has been considerably excited for a few days past concerning a wild animal running at large on the farm of Rev. Samuel Hollar. It has been seen by a number of reliable persons besides Mr. Hollar himself, who shot at it. It is white and as large as a good size dog and some nights keeps up such a squalling and yelping around Mr. Hollar's house as to rob him entirely of sleep. Dogs will neither run it, consequently it is in little danger of being caught by those who almost daily hunt for it."

I enjoy the Mercury very much as my ancestors lived in Nicholas County from as early as 1790 and I have done so much reading on the history and people of the county and

THE MOVING FORCE

PEOPLE PROBLEMS

More imaginative solutions for "people problems" are essential in industry not only to improve business operations but also to help assure the renewal of society itself.

This need was stressed by Daniel Parker, Chairman of the Board of the National Association of Manufacturers, at the 40th NAM Institute on Industrial Relations, held in Puerto Rico.

"While technology is leaping ahead, our knowledge of how to deal with people is barely creeping along," Mr. Parker, Chairman of the Board, Parker Pen Company, said. "It is people, not things, that make the economy go."

The impact of technological advances on people, he said, must be carefully assessed by industrial relations experts as a major corporate activity.

"This is partly because of growing awareness that the talents and commitment of people afford the most solid base upon which to build a company, and from which to achieve a long-term competitive advantage," he added.

Mr. Parker pointed out that a larger voice in management's councils is being accorded to the man who knows how to solve "people problems."

"Industry is dedicated to re-emphasing the importance of the individual," he said. "In the recent copper strike--on a forever coalition bargaining is dominant--no individual rights were being protected. Rather these rights were laid on the line as a sacrifice to the goals of the international union which has the support and need for protection as an underprivileged institution.

"The growing focus on organizational effectiveness concerns the premium on developing individual potential at a time when individuals generally feel alienated, frustrated, depersonalized and lost in a mass society," Mr. Parker concluded.

Gipsy Smith Jr., son of the famous Gypsy Smith will conduct a two-week evangelistic campaign in Carlisle under the sponsorship of the Carlisle Baptist Church. The services will be held in a large tent to be erected on the lot next to the Armory.

The 14th annual Nicholas County Spring Rally Day attracted more than 400 4-H Club members, leaders and parents. The demonstrations were held in the circuit court room.

Plans to convert the vacant lot behind the Methodist Church into a community recreation center are being made. When completed the lot will include a tennis court, a grill for outdoor meals and other recreational facilities. It will be open to the public but will be under the direction of the church board.

At the monthly city council meeting the local police were ordered to "crack down" on motorists who were using Main Street as a speedway. Council, upon the request of W.T. Fisher, vice president of the Nicholas County Business Association, voted to exempt the Giffin Manufacturing Co. from city taxes for the next five years. The local manufacturing concern now has a total of 43 employees. Council increased the wages of men working on the city truck to $30 per week.

Fellow Nicholas Countians:

The year is 1948 and we live in a world never before experienced by man. With the raising of Israel as a new and totally different day, filled with opportunity to climb and goals to accomplish, awaits us.

The world we live in today is not to be one of the most profitable way to pass it on to our children. We must prepare our young people for this world and the most important way known is through their entertainment.

As chairman of the annual Teen Inn Drive, I feel that supporting the Teen Inn can be the most profitable way of preparing our youth for tomorrow.

We have renewed our efforts to make the Teen Inn a "home-away-from-home," for Nicholas County youngsters. Show your interest in our young people May 9 by generously contributing when a young adult calls upon you.

Mrs. John E. Soper Jr.

To the Editor:

As chairman of the 1968 Easter Seal Campaign in Nicholas County, I want to thank all the wonderful people who contributed to the campaign in so many ways.

In addition to all those who gave money, there were a great many who also gave their time and talents. Special thanks are due to your newspaper whose fine coverage of the campaign was invaluable.

Although our Easter Seal contributions are made at one time each year, the work of the Kentucky Society for Crippled Children--the Easter Seal Society--goes on 24 hours each day every day of the year, so it is never too late to give to help crippled children.

Again, sincere thanks to all who participated in our drive for those less fortunate than ourselves.

Sincerely,

Joe Crouch
Easter Seal Chairman

Agree Or Not,

I Say What I Think

By S. C. Van Curon

Frankfort, Ky.--Can the presidency of the United States be bought?

That's a question makers of Gov. Roger Branigin, the favorite son candidate in Indiana, are posing. The governor, a lifelong friend of lieutenant, Gordon St. Angelo, has been charging the senators Bobby Kennedy and Eugene McCarty forces will spend more than $2 million in the Indiana primary. Both senators minimize this figure. Gov. Branigin does not give a figure of spending for the two, but he made his position quite clear by saying, "I don't think Indiana is for sale."

Thus, Branigin indicates that a lotof money is being spent in his home state by the two Democrats seeking the Democratic nomination. While anyone with any political knowledge of past elections will agree that money is a necessary ingredient, most agree that money isn't the only qualification in the eyes of the people.

Bobby and his entourage of believers in the divine right of succession for the Harvard crowd, have belittled President Johnson ever since he succeeded to the presidency, and they have not let up in this campaign, regardless of the cost to the nation on the world scene.

Bobby's appeals have all been directed to special interest groups and the spell-binders, but he has not made a broad overall appeal that centers on the philosophy of this nation.

While McCarty opposes the policy on the Vietnam war, he has been more discreet in his campaign talks, but it is evident he is trying to run on a policy opposed to the present policy under President Johnson.

Never on the Republican side, former Vice President Richard M. Nixon, appeared to make a hit with editors attending the meeting of the American Society of Newspaper Editors in Washington.

It wasan impromptu affair and Nixon answered the questions from a panel of editors. He said it is a serious mistake for politicians in either party to make derogatory statements about President Johnson's negotiations with Vietnam.

Nixon said this is the time of great delicacy for the nation and he would not make any criticism or discuss the negotiations until they are concluded He believes the president is adopting the right course trying to get the peace talks going.

This seems to me to be the more prudent course for a serious-thinking American to pursue in this moment of national crisis. No man should jeopardize national safety for personal gain.

News reports indicate Nixon scored heavily with the editors when he said there cannot be order in a free society without progress, and there cannot be progress without order." This was in reference to riots in the cities. He said he is not one of those who propose merely the expenditure of billions of taxpayer money as the sole cure for riots.

He told the editors he is convinced that private industry, in cooperation with the government, can creat jobs and train the unskilled, in other words be the "employer of last resort" in times of doles, and that is the American way of life.

This country has had more than 30 years of experience in trying to spend its way out of social problems, and that should be sufficient proof that it will not work, regardless of what Bobby Kennedy says.

"About the only redeeming feature of failure is freedom from taxation and envy."

Area Extension Agents:

The nation's 3 million 4-H Club members are versatile as well as dedicated as was the best use of "head, heart, hands and health." Dozens of projects are offered by the Cooperative Extension Service. They are designed to develop confidence and skills. Learning by doing leads to home and farm projects that benefit the youths and their families as well.

One such project is horticulture. Its broad scope covers ornamental gardening, raising produce for home and for sale, architectural landscaping, and keeping up the home grounds.

Examples of what some of last year's top 4-Hers did were to earn money for school by marketing fruits and vegetables at roadside stands and local grocers; experiment with soil and cross breeding of plants, and plan long-range landscaping projects to enhance value of their homes.

Improving and beautifying their own neighborhoods has long been a practice of 4-H Club members, and those enrolled in the horticulture program make a great contribution in these efforts. Community projects also are undertaken such as landscaping church grounds, small parkways, memorial gardens and the like.

Home sewing may no longer be a necessity, but it is one of the fastest growing home arts. Making one's own clothes is a favorite hobby of many women today than ever before, what's more, there is a certain prestige attached to home sewing.

The machine itself has been so greatly improved during the past decade that it can do almost anything --from embroidering and darning to buttonholes and invisable stitching.

Choice and design of fabrics provide a kaleidoscope of colors and textures. Trimmings, fastenings and patterns help make home sewing easier and give clother the "custom-made" look.

Into this exciting world of fashion have come girls just learning to sew, and their older sisters who are well on their way to becoming amateur couturieres. Under the guidance of well qualified volunteer clothing leaders, some 700,000 girls between 9 and 19 years of age are turning out school clothes, sports attire, formals and even suits and coats.

Garments are inspected for straight seams, proper stitching, fit, overall finishing, and accessories. Oftentimes the older girls judge younger member's garments and their own, as well.

They exhibit their work at local 4-H events and at the county fair. The four highest ranking members in the county receive a handsome gold-filled 4-H Clothing medal.

The Blue Grass Area 4-H Junior Council has just recently been organized. All nine counties in the area are represented on the Council by two teenage delegates each.

The Nicholas County delegates are Linda Curtsinger and Eddie Fryman. These delegates were chosen because of their leadership and public relations abilities.

Qualities such as these will be put to use often because the goals of this Council are;

- To co-ordinate the 4-H Clubs in the area into a body working together for excellence in area and state activities.
- To work with the Senior Council and Area 4-H Agent in planning and introducing new activities.

The officers of this Council are; Janet Riggs, president, Fayette; Danny Coper, vice-president, Anderson, and Joy Carnes, Madison.

The first goal of the Junior Council is to form Junior Councils in each county.

Local Business

By S. S. Talbert, Chairman
Dept. of Journalism
University of Mississippi

Easter sales of retail stores again reached record breaking levels this year, During the seasonal buying spree, all types of business flourished.

Of course newspaper advertising had a major part to play in the record retail sales. And both newspapers and the retailers who did the advertising should be proud of their roles in stimulating the community economy.

Like the Christmas buying, Easter buying is for the most part unselfish. Easter gifts are concrete expressions of love. The wife who receives flowers or candy once or twice a year certainly does not feel like her husband has been exploited by advertising. She is more likely to thank the advertisers for jolting a complacent husband into demonstrating his affection and appreciation.

Purchase of a relatively expensive Easter outfit may appear to be an unjustified extravagance, However, for the average consumer the Easter purchase is a long delayed purchase. It represents the fulfilling of a need at a time when fulfilment will mean maximum enjoyment.

Most Easter buying is for goods which will be used and enjoyed for months and perhaps for years.

Easter advertising does not spring the public willy-nilly on crazy shopping sprees.

Like all good retail advertising, Easter advertising and other seasonal advertising tells the people where they can get the things they want at the time they want them most.

Black Shank Detection Process Developed By U.K. Pathologists

Lexington, Ky.--

The balck shank fungus is one of the most destructive diseases encountered by the tobacco farmer. It is one of the most difficult organisms for plant pathologists to detect in the field.

But a process developed at the University of Kentucky, Agricultural Experiment Station, plant pathology department is a big step toward overcoming the latter difficulty.

Dr. J.W. Hendrix (cq), plant pathologist, and Randal A. Flowers, a doctoral candidate in the department, this week described the process. Dr. Hendrix directed Flower's research but gives the graduate student credit for most of the work.

After much trial and error, Flowers found a combination of chemicals that would, in a soil sample, prevent growth of bacteria and fungi except (1) the black shank fungus and (2) Pythium, another destructive fungus.

Thus, the system is possible now; (a) A soil sample can be taken from a field where black shank is suspected; (b) it can be handled in the laboratory so that within 48 hours at the most, aperca of the black shank fungus and/ or Pythium will show up as a colony; and (c) within another 96 hours, the race of black shank fungus (there are two, Race 0 and Race 1) can be determined.

The value of the detection process lies in the simple fact that prior to this work discovery of black shank in a field was costly, time-consuming and not accurate.

"We have had no good way to detect the black shank fungus in soil," Dr. Hendrix says. "The old method was to plant the susceptible tobacco in the soil in the greenhouse or to place a tobacco leaf in the soil, but this method required several weeks for the disease to show up and then often failed to detect the fungus. We hope this method will prove to be fast and accurate in detecting the fungus."

Flower's process uses a selective "medium," agar and chemicals. Some of the chemicals are antibiotics such as penicillin, which kills bacteria. Others are chemicals that kill fungi.

None of the chemicals used, however, will kill black shank (a member of the Phytophthora genus) or Pythium. In fact, one of the chemicals used, gallic acid, not only is deadly to some fungi but is beneficial to the black shank fungus and Pythiu,. It causes the latter two to grow faster. It took a while to work out the right materials for the medium.

A milliliter (one one-thousandth of a liter) of a water suspension of the
