Hog Prices May Increase U. K. Business Letter Says

Lexington, Ky.--Pork supplies may be somewhat smaller this year, and prices therefore may strengthen, the University of Kentucky agricultural economics department says this week in its bi-weekly outlook letter.

Continued strong demand for pork also will be a factor in the anticipated better prices, says economist Wilmer Browning, author of the report.

He noted hog production began a sizable expansion in late 1965 in response to high prices. It was not until the December 1967-February 1968 pig crop that swine numbers began to decline. This was due to lower prices. "Hog prices have declined from the relatively high level of 1966 when prices at eight major markets averaged $23.50 a hundred. During the fall of 1967, prices were down to $17.60 a hundred, about $2.80 a hundred from the year before and more than $7.50 a hundred from the two-year-earlier level."

He noted that hog prices averaged higher the first months of 1968 than the last quarter of 1967. They weakened some the last few weeks but still averaging higher than for the same period a year earlier.

"Producers intentions indicate sow farrowings will be reduced three per cent below year-earlier levels during March-May 1968 and June-August 1968," Browning noted too, that though hog prices have declined, feed costs also have dropped some.

Cash receipts from hogs in Kentucky likely will be about 10 per cent of total cash receipts for 1968.

New Film Released By Southern Bell

Here is Tomorrow, a remarkable motion picture on the life of Alexander Graham Bell, has just been released by the Bell System for nationwide distribution to the general public, according to Southern Bell manager C.A. Harris.

Filmed on location near the houses and laboratories where Bell lived and worked, this 28-minute, 16 mm color film dramatizes many virtually unknown aspects of Bell's career.

"Everyone knows Alexander Graham Bell invented the telephone," said Harris. "But few many people know he designed and built the first plane flown before the American public and an early iron lung?

"And those things were just the beginning. Bell laid the groundwork for many developments that are in the vanguard of scientific achievement even now. For instance, he experimented with the hydrofoil, with the telephone probe--a forerunner of x-ray, and with voice transmission via light beams, which we're achieving today with lasers.

"The Bell System decided to make Here is Tomorrow because we felt that wider knowledge of Bell's work can contribute substantially to a better understanding of today's world and its technology," Harris added.

THE FAMILY LAWYER

Taming the Kidnapper

Of all the agonies inflicted upon the family of a kidnap victim, probably the worst is the fear that harm will befall their loved one.

To stay the kidnapper's hand, the Federal Kidnapping Act — and some state kidnap laws as well — impose a milder penalty on the kidnapper if he releases the victim unharmed.

What does that mean? What kind of "harm" are these laws talking about?

Obviously there is harm inflicted, calling for the heavier penalty, when the victim has been subjected to a deliberate beating or a criminal assault.

Likewise, a court held that harm had been inflicted when two women and a child were locked in a small, overheated closet, and later found hand and foot with ropes and wire.

On the other hand, when the only injury was that the kidnapper had ignored the victim's arms held enough to hurt, the court refused to impose the heavier penalty.

"Such trivial injury," said the judge, "is not sufficient to constitute bodily harm."

Suppose the injury is indeed serious, but--rather than being inflicted by the kidnapper--is the result of the victim's own attempt to escape. Does that kind of injury "count" against the kidnapper?

The court said yes in one case, in which a girl was hurt when she jumped from a moving car. The court reasoned that, since the kidnapper had been threatening to assault her, the dangers of an attempted flight could fairly be attributed to him.

But in another case, where no threats of harm preceded the escape attempt, the court ruled that the resulting injury could not justify a heavier penalty against the kidnapper.

It may seem strange to draw such careful distinctions in judging someone as reprehensible as a kidnapper.

Yet, after all, the law's purpose is not to do the kidnapper any favors but to reduce the danger to his victim. This can be achieved only if the kidnapper has reason to believe that, if he goes easier on the victim, the law will go easier on him.

Rev. Gaines And Family

Rev. Gaines And Family To Leave For Hong Kong

Rev. Edgar H. Gaines III, pastor of the Moorefield and Headquarters Methodist Churches for the past three years, was graduated from Asbury Theological Seminary in Wilmore, Tuesday, May 28 with the Masters of Divinity degree. Following his graduation, the Gaines family will soon leave their present quarrate to prepare for missionary work in the British Crown Colony of Hong Kong, a land of only some four hundred square miles of territory but four million people.

Mr. Gaines, before marriage and following college graduation in 1960, served in missionary work for nearly four years in Hong Kong and Portuguese Macao, where he helped establish new churches, founded an orphanage, taught, and preached. Now he is returning with his family for a four year term. During the next several months they will be speaking in churches, raising interest and support for their new mission. They expect to leave in November. In January they will begin language studies which will continue for two years. They will be serving with the Oriental Missionary Society.

Local Places Of Interest

By Paula Jean Vice

Friday, May 17, the fifth and sixth grades of Moorefield School visited three places of interest. They were accompanied by the fifth grade teacher, Miss Evelyn Brierly and substitute sixth grade teacher, Mrs. Judy Shaw in the absence of Mrs. Lucille Irvin.

The first place visited was the Southern Bell Telephone Exchange. We were shown through the building in groups by a guide who explained things to us. It really seemed a mystery. We all were amazed at so many wires and the clicking sounds. We wondered what Alexander Graham Bell would think if he could see the change and improvements in his invention.

The second place visited was the factory here, at Mt. Sterling, and Paris.

We throughly enjoyed all three places and we feel Nicholas County should be very proud of them--it does show progress.

We want to thank each place for permitting us to come and we appreciate the courtesy extended us.

Special Education Class

The Special Education class opened for this year on Aug. 28. After two weeks of school it changed from being a part of the Title I program to a regular unit of the school system.

Emphasis has been placed on physical education and personal grooming this year. The children like the jungle gym, the newest play equipment given by the P.T.A. at the Carlisle Elementary School, and to clean up for walks and going home.

They have learned to carry their plates to the table without spilling the food. It is hoped some day they will be able to eat in the cafeteria.

Progress has been made in helping the class fit into the social life of the Elementary school. They participated for the first time with the 1st grade in the Thanksgiving and Christmas programs.

The parents organization has helped with birthday parties, holiday parties with trying to sell the class to parents of other handicaped children, with transportation for the teachers to special meetings in Paris and Lexington, and on an outing to close out the year. The class went to Blue Licks Park, May 20.

The class will be out June third. The public is invited to visit the class room at any time.
