SENSING THE NEWS.....By Thurman Sensing.....The Challenge Of The Presidency

The array of problems facing the next President of the United States staggers the imagination. Other Presidents have encountered crises on their entry into the White House, but there has never been anything on the scale of the difficulties facing the United States today at home and abroad.

In the months before the election, things went from bad to worse. After several years of fighting communism in Southeast Asia, the United States, through the decision of President Lyndon Johnson, proposed that the Communist Viet Cong be allowed to sit down alongside the free Vietnamese at the Paris "peace" talks.

This invitation from the outgoing administration was a slap in the face of the South Vietnamese who have fought so bravely and suffered so many casualties in their resistance to Red terrorists. The Johnson administration's invitation was an especially cruel betrayal of the Americans who were wounded or who lost their lives in Vietnam, Why were Americans asked to go to battle if President Johnson were willing to negotiate with the VC?

The election campaign itself was evidence of the tragic state of affairs in the nation. Leftwing hecklers introduced a new and ugly note into the American style of campaigning. This ugliness bodes ill for the United States in the years ahead. What we have witnessed is a decline from the standards of civility that are essential to the good order of a republic. Men seeking public office should not be subjected to abuse from anarchists who want to turn this country into a madhouse.

After every election, the new President has the task of binding up political wounds. This year, the task is not the ordinary one. The campaign, and the months of agitation and anarchist activity preceding it, indicated that a spirit of nihilism--of nothingness-worship--is abroad in the land. This was especially evident in the tumult on certain campuses and in the rise of radical splinter parties pledged to the destruction of basic American values.

What the nation needs in the months ahead, therefore, is not routine application of balm to political wounds but a determination to get at the roots of the disease and the disloyalty that have convulsed the United States in the last few years. A free republic can stand a few crackpots, but it cannot permanently endure a sizable disaffected element that openly asserts its desire to burn down the nation and to toss American values into the junk pile.

There is no place in America for those who are deeply alienated, who have selected for themselves the role of Benedict Arnolds. The Congress must look sternly at the problem of the disaffected and determine to do something about it. American citizenship is a great blessing, a privilege that millions of people around the world would cherish. It is shameful that a minority of our people see in citizenship a license to abuse the land of the free and the home of the brave. The abuse must be stopped. Good Americans would err if they encouraged excessive tolerance that has provoked the war against America from within.

What is needed in the wake of the election is a new appreciation of the importance of tightening up all our national values and requirements. We need to review the era of the handout through which we have passed, and determine to call a halt to the giveaways that demoralize people. Material things have their place in life, and hard-working citizens deserve the creature comforts they are able to buy for themselves. But we need to reappraise the excessive materialism of the "liberal" political vision. No people becomes great solely through acquisition of material benefits, especially those handed out by a political regime. The American Republic grew to greatness because of its inner qualities--its spiritual vision of life that accented personal freedom and responsibility.

The President of the United States cannot overlook his duty to exercise a considerable degree of spiritual leadership--leadership in the spirit of freedom. He has the duty of reminding his fellow citizens that the great civilizations and the great countries have been those with moral stamina and with a passion for self-reliance, plus respect for law. The values of American life have been eroded in recent years. They require restoration in the years ahead. The Presidency is an office that can give the American people guidance in the importance of enduring values fundamental to life in a republic.

Educational Services Available To School

Nicholas is one of the twenty counties participating in a continuing program in Central Kentucky aimed at the development of imaginative solutions to educational problems.

The Central Kentucky Regional Center located in Lexington, again has counseling, video tape, and visitation--consultant services available to local school districts at no cost. Counseling services are available at 10 schools, the video tape unit brings tapes of innovative programs and consultant presentations to local in-service meetings, and the visitation-consultant program provides funds for teacher visitation to innovative program sites and for consultant services to in-service meetings.

The project also provides two specially developed innovative programs for teacher visitation; a Pre-Vocational Junior High School Program in Lexington and a Flexibly Scheduled High School in Versailles.

Dr. Sam Sears, director of the Region IV-B Project says, "The concept underlying the project is that in-service teacher education is the key to the development of more relevant educational programs for our children. Teachers, who ultimately implement such programs, must be involved in their development. The Region IV-B project provides teachers with this opportunity."

The Region IV-B project is operated under Title III of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965.

Freedom Shares More Convenient

A. M. Brinkley, Jr., Volunteer State Chairman for U. S. Savings Bonds, reports that recent legislation permits the redemption of Savings Notes (Freedom Shares) in the same manner as Series E Bonds.

Formerly, Freedom Shares had to be forwarded to a Federal Reserve Bank or the Treasurer of the United States for redemption.

Mr. Brinkley points out that this new legislation makes Freedom Shares an even more cheerful companion to Series E Bonds. Freedom Shares, issued on and after June 1, 1968, now pay 5 percent, compounded semiannually, if held to maturity of 4 1/2 years.

Freedom Shares may be purchased on the Payroll Savings Plan where you work or over the counter at your bank in combination with Series E Bonds of the same or larger denomination. They must be held for one year before they may be redeemed.

Soil Insecticides May Be Needed

LEXINGTON, KY.-- Applying a soil insecticide to the tobacco plant-bed site this fall may save you work next spring.

It's a chore that can save much time, says Ira Massie, L. K. Cooperative Extension Service specialist.

After the bed site has been plowed, treat with a recommended insecticide. Area extension offices in the counties can list the materials you can use. After the insecticide is on, treat against weeds. Granules or emulsifiable concentrates are recommended. The material (granules or sprays) should be disked into the top three to five inches of soil.

There are certain rules to follow about soil insecticides, Mr. Massie notes. If the site is an old bed site, will be used next season, and was treated with a soil insecticide the last one or two years---don't waste your time and money. Soil insecticides are effective from two to three years in the soil.
