Research--The Key To Better Highways

The safety and convenience built into Kentucky's modern highways didn't just "happen." On the contrary. The tremendous strides that have been made over the years in providing better highway transportation for less cost are, in great measure, the result of careful, painstaking research and study.

Who conducts this research? What are some of the research achievements that have transformed dirt paths into high-speed expressways? As most highway research activity is conducted quietly without a lot of ballyhoo and fanfare, the answers aren't widely known.

Because the individual state highway departments are charged with designing, building, operating, and maintaining the majority of America's road mileage, including the 41,000 mile Interstate System, it's not surprising that in all 50 states, the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico there are highway research programs under way.

The Bureau of Public Roads of the Federal Highway Administration, which is responsible for overseeing Federally financed highway construction conducted by the states, has an office of Research and Development which cooperates very closely with Kentucky in that portion of its research program financed through Federal-aid "Highway Planning and Research" funds. This money amounts to 1½% of the total Federal-aid allocated to Kentucky by Washington.

In addition to its own research activity and that of the Bureau, there are also other important ways in which Kentucky contributes to and participates in highway research.

First, the Kentucky Department of Highways is an active member of the greatly-respected Highway Research Board. The Board was created as an arm of the century-old National Academy of Science, a private scientific organization with headquarters in Washington, D. C.

The Highways Research Board brings together, in a logical and directed manner, the talents of the most outstanding minds in the state highway departments, state and local government, Federal agencies, universities and industry.

The Highway Research Board, through 115 committees, determines what research is needed, stimulates such research and make known the findings to those who can use them to improve highway transportation. A number of Kentucky Highway Department personnel serve on one or more of these committees.

The Highway Research Board also sponsors an annual meeting each January in Washington, D. C., which is regularly attended by Kentucky Highway Department personnel. At these meetings top highway engineers and administrators present new research findings and exchange useful knowledge concerning all facets of highway transportation.

In addition to its participation in the work of the Highway Research Board the Kentucky Department of Highways also actively supports the National Cooperative Highway Research Program or the NCHRP. The NCHRP was established as a means to accelerate research in particularly acute problems affecting highway transportation on a national basis.

The program is administered by the Highway Research Board and each year all of the state highway departments get together and submit new research projects to the Board. The Board, in turn, finds the most appropriate research agency to conduct the studies and when the projects are completed, the Board publishes the results.

The studies deal with problems of bridge design, traffic safety, traffic operations and control, roadside development and beautification, information storage and retrieval, and general highway administration and economics.

It would be a difficult task indeed to itemize all the important highway advances and "breakthroughs" brought about over the years through research. But certainly, many things that we take for granted as motorists today are the result of yesterday's research efforts. Controlled access highways, pressed concrete, roadbed testing of soil density, air-entrained concrete, soil stabilization techniques, the ability to determine highway capacity, computerized traffic control signals, highway signs and markings, and much, much more all have been developed through research.

The Kentucky Department of Highways is proud of the role it has traditionally played in fostering and participating in these important research activities. In doing so, the Department has helped meet the continuing challenge of a state and nation on wheels.

New Era In Federal Assistance Opened With Secretary Freeman's Ground Breaking

Secretary of Agriculture, Orville L. Freeman, August 21 opened a new era in Federal assistance to rural America when he broke ground for the first ten new homes to be financed with interest-supplement loans authorized by the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968.

Major provision of the new legislation is the authority it provides to Farmers Home Administration to make interest supplement payments on housing loans for families with incomes too low to meet in full the monthly payments on rural housing loans.

Actual interest rates can be thus reduced to as little as one percent.

At Triana, Alabama, a negro Community near Huntsville, the Secretary conducted the closing ceremonies for the new home of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Jefferson. The Jeffersons, who have eight children, will build a new four-bedroom home, and the Farmers Home Administration will provide an interest supplement of $569 per year.

At Washington, Georgia, Mr. Freeman broke ground for the new three-bedroom house of Mr. and Mrs. Halace W. McAvoy, for which an annual interest supplement of $166 will be provided. The McAvoys have three children.

He noted that both Alabama and Georgia have been among the leading states in taking advantage of the rural housing loan program. More than 20,000 of the 246,000 loans made nationally since the program was launched in 1949 have been made in these two states.

The Secretary said just over 52 million has been loaned for rural housing through June 30, 1968. "More than 90 percent of this total has been loaned since 1961," he added. "The new authorities we inaugurate today will vastly expand our capacities to help rural America."

Senator John J. Sparkman of Alabama was present at the Triana ceremonies, and Representative Robert G. Stephens, Jr., of Georgia joined the Secretary at the Washington, Georgia, groundbreaking.

Mr. Freeman also praised the new law's provision authorizing matching grants up to two-thirds of the project cost by the Department of Housing and Urban Development for comprehensive planning in multi-county districts. He said this authorization will enable State and local governments to move forward and overcome the obstacles to intergovernmental coordination in the development of resources and services.

"Planning is absolutely essential so that we may regain a healthy urban-rural balance in America," Mr. Freeman said. "We must plan now for an America that offers a free choice of a good life everywhere--in the big city, in the suburbs, in 'new towns,' in small rural communities and on the farm."

"The pace of change has been too fast for us to comprehend," he added, "but at last, America is realizing that the space-starved city and the opportunity-starved rural community are two sides of the same coin--the rural poor of yesterday are largely the urban poor of today. So we must retain rural America so that the rural poor of today will not be the urban poor of tomorrow. Comprehensive planning is essential to that revitalization process and the restoration of rural/urban balance."

Secretary Freeman concluded his day-long visit of Alabama and Georgia with an address to the Soil Conservation Society of America, meeting at the University of Georgia in Athens.

His theme was the need to build properly for the future since the discovery "that in the pell mell drive of progress we have achieved an unprecedented quantity of life with little, if any, thought to the quality of life."

He called for "a total national commitment by people and by governments at all levels to a basic national policy of conservation and use of resources for people; of local, area, regional and national planning--and action--for people.

"Political boundaries must cease to be barriers to progress," the Secretary said in his prepared remarks. "The people in towns and counties that can't provide good schools or hospitals or other services must understand that they have no chance for a life of genuine quality unless they band together in multi-county planning to pool the resources of the whole area for the good of all its parts."

Mr. Freeman observed that future generations will say of those who now stress conservation and development of human and natural resources: "They showed us how to fashion from quantity a quality that kept a growing nation strong."

The Farmers Home Administration Office which serves Nicholas County is located in the Post Office Building in Carlisle, Ky. and is open every Tuesday. The County Supervisor is Bob Roy Norton.

What the Governor Thinks of Marlow Cook

"Mr. Cook has lost the public's confidence for he has been unable to solve the problems of his own county. If he can't provide the leadership needed in Jefferson County, how can he provide leadership for Kentucky's 120 counties..."
...Louie B. Nunn, Burkesville, Ky., May 11, 1967.

"Cook has failed to show adequate leadership in the fields of education, reducing crime and in the open-housing issue."
...Louie B. Nunn, Middlesboro, Ky., April 18, 1967.

"I'll never let anybody else ever make fun of us," said Governor Nunn in speech saying that Cook mimicked the speech of rural Kentuckians at a Shively meeting. Jamestown, Ky., May 12, 1967.

"Mr. Cook has advocated the end of free textbooks and free schoolbusses in Jefferson County schools."
Nunn for Governor advertisement in the Allen County News. May 17, 1967.

"Marlow Cook has no constructive program for Kentucky."
Louie B. Nunn, Harlan, Ky., May 1967.

Charles I. Dawson, Louie B. Nunn's campaign manager described Cook: "Dictatorial, autocratic, tricky, and evasive politician. He is intolerant of the views of those whom he cannot control. His changes of position from time to time on public questions are dictated from political considerations rather than personal conviction."
Louisville, Feb. 8, 1967.
