Surgery For Cataract Is 95 Percent Safe And Successful

Cataract, the clouding of the normally-clear lens within the eye, is the greatest single cause of blindness among American adults today. But it also holds the greatest promise for the restoration of useful vision for its victims.

According to the Kentucky Society for the Prevention of Blindness, "senile" cataracts account for 17.2 percent of all blindness among adults in the United States, up from 16.5 percent in 1940 because of the lengthening human lifespan and the survival of more men and women in those age groups most susceptible to cataracts.

Removal of the clouded lens by surgery and the subsequent fitting of spectacles or contact lenses is the only possible treatment for the cataract patient at this time. The cause of cataract is not yet fully understood by doctors and, despite many such claims, there are no salves, drops, or other medications that will dissolve a cataract. Surgery for cataracts, while a delicate and serious operation, is safe and effective more than 95 times out of 100. Patients, with the aid of special glasses or contact lenses, thus regain the precious ability to see.

Why then, if surgery is so effective, does cataract remain the major cause of blindness?

Basically, because of the difficulty in persuading elderly cataract victims to have professional eye examinations and on having them, to overcome the understandable reluctance on their part to have the necessary surgical treatment. Some older persons accept cataract as an inevitable penalty for growing old, others find it hard to decide which is the lesser problem, cataracts or the worry associated with eye surgery.

The Society maintains that elderly patients undergo surgery more easily than had ever been anticipated. The Society is now giving new emphasis to its public education program to persuade an ever-increasing number of senior citizens that cataracts need not mean permanent blindness.

The Society is an affiliate of the National Society for the Prevention of Blindness, Inc., founded in 1908. The only voluntary health agency nationally engaged in the prevention of blindness through a comprehensive program of community services, public and professional education and research.

SUDDENLY, SUCCESS CROWNS EFFORTS Undaunted by discouragements and frustrations, they finally succeed in creating a process that not only captures the "natural color" or "living color" pictures seen on television. . . but also makes them compared to the dingy, dull, grayish tones of VIBRANT-COLOR.

SCIENTISTS CHOOSE WESTVALE STUDIOS It was no accident that Westvale Studios was chosen by the Photographic Society of America as the exclusive use of VIBRANT-COLOR. Westvale is one of the largest portrait studios in the country. . . and one of the most progressive with a staff of highly-trained, professional photographers and technicians (not clerks) who have won numerous awards for their creative efforts. HERE'S WHAT PARENTS SAY:

"I AM OVERWHELMED! I never believed anything could be so truly beautiful!" writes Mrs. C. N. of Plattsburg, N.Y.

"My VIBRANT-COLOR portrait of Donny and little Robin is the envy of all my friends," writes Mrs. J. S. of Casper, Wyoming.

"I've been a successful artist most of my adult years and I tell you truthfully, one would think it came from the brush of a Rembrandt or Da Vinci," says Mr. M. F., painter and artist of Syracuse, N.Y.

All you need is this certificate . . . Save it!

They were members of the Shaker movement that began at Pleasant Hill in 1805 reached a peak of some 500 members in the mid-1800's and survived until 1910. Now, the sturdy buildings of their village have undergone an impressive restoration and the beauties of their unique way of life are on display for the modern-day visitor.

Students will register alphabetically at 15-minute intervals, beginning at 8 a.m. Registration will be held in the Alumni Coliseum.

Upperclassmen will register Wednesday; freshmen and sophomores Thursday and Friday.

Registration for graduates students and those in the continuing education program is scheduled for Saturday, September 21.

The school, to be known as the Central Kentucky Area Vocational School, will offer training in 19 study areas--five more than possible in old facilities. Nunn administration has been able to increase funds for vocational schools 74.6 per cent.

War Against Crime Costs More Than Viet Nam War

Richmond, Ky.--

The war against crime in the United States requires more money than the War in Viet Nam.

This observation was made by Vincent O'Leary, director of research, training and information for the National Council on Crime and Delinquency, in an address to the quarterly training conference of corrections officers at Eastern Kentucky University.

"Organized crime--the racketeer--cost the United States $30 billion a year," O'Leary said. "Law and order is much more than riot control."

Employing projections from present statistics, O'Leary supported his points and made even more predictions.

"Let's take juvenile delinquency," he said, "forty percent of American males born this year will be arrested for a non-traffic offense. If he's born in a city, the figure becomes 60 per cent, and if he is black, 90 per cent."

Of convicted offenders, 40 to 50 percent return to prison for various reasons, including parole violation, he said.

O'Leary believes that probation and parole officers are preventers of crime, in that successful work with first offenders helps "change the world of interrelationships that contributed to the first offense; for him and for others."

Government agencies are beginning to hire persons with a single offense but with good parole or probation records, he said.

O'Leary called for a strong merit system for corrections officers. Their jobs, he said, must not be subject to changes in political leadership, or Kentucky--or any other state--will not be able to control its own crime problem.
