Christian Science Lecture Scheduled September 19

A Christian Science lecturer coming to Lexington on Thursday, Sept. 19, and will discuss today's "identity crisis" and how a deepened understanding of man's relationship to God can help.

The speaker will be Jane O. Robbins, C.S., of Boulder, Colorado. Her visit is being sponsored by First Church of Christ, Scientist, Lexington.

The lecture begins at 8:00 p.m. in Mitchell Fine Arts Center, Transylvania College, North Broadway at Fourth Street. It's titled, "Freedom To Be Yourself." Admission is free and the lecture is open to the public.

Miss Robbins is a native of Ontario, Canada. During World War II, she was a service pilot with the Army Air Force.--After the war, she spent some time in Alaska and flew as a bush-pilot in the Nome-Point Barrow area. Later, she became a representative for an aircraft corporation in Illinois.

The first practical air conditioner which controlled temperatures and humidity was installed in a Brooklyn printing plant in 1902. Nowadays, air conditioners are used in hen houses (to boost egg production), barns, (hogs fatten faster, cows give more milk), and sugar refineries (to keep the granules from lumping together.)

Five Youth Beef Shows To Net $12,000 In Prizes

FRANKFORT--Young Kentuckians will have an opportunity to compete for $12,000 in prize money at five district beef shows and sales scheduled during September and October.

The beef shows are sponsored by the Kentucky Department of Agriculture in cooperation with 4-H Clubs, Future Farmers of America, and meat processors.

First on the schedule is the Purchase District Beef Show and Sale Sept. 23-26 at Murray.

Robert Miller, commissioner of Agriculture, explained "The purpose of the beef shows is to afford farm youth an opportunity to evaluate their production to determine if they are producing the quality of livestock acceptable to processors and consumers."

Other shows are as follows: Blue Grass Beef Show and Sale, Sept. 25-27 at Lexington; Pennyroyal Beef Show and Sale, Oct. 1-4 at Hopkinsville; Green River Beef Show and Sale, Oct. 6-9 at Owensboro; and the Northern Kentucky Beef Show and Sale, Oct. 9 at Maysville.

After three of the on-foot shows, arrangements will be made for selected animals to be slaughtered and entered in a carcass contest. Carcass contests will be offered at Murray, Hopkinsville and Owensboro.

Commissioner Miller plans to attend as many of the beef shows as his schedule will permit. He believes the experience will be valuable for youthful exhibitors supplements their educational program.

No registration fee is needed in order for exhibitors to participate in any of the five beef shows, according to Wallace Rich, director of the division of shows and fairs, State Agriculture Department.

An exhibitor may enter only one district event, buy may choose from any of the five beef shows scheduled throughout the state.

More information about the shows may be obtained by contacting the division of shows and fairs, Kentucky Department of Agriculture, Capitol Annex Building, Frankfort, Ky., 40601, Rich said..

Danville's Historic McDowell House
And Apothecary Shop

There's a structure in Danville, Kentucky, where medical history was made. It's the Ephraim McDowell House and Apothecary Shop. Here Dr. McDowell (1771-1830) practiced medicine, operated the first drug store west of the Alleghenies and laid the groundwork for modern gynecology.

On Christmas Day in 1809, Dr. McDowell performed the world's first successful ovariotomy. The British medical authorities of that day thought such an operation impossible. It could only result, they said, in dreadful pain followed by certain death.

The patient was Jane Todd Crawford, a 45-year-old mother of five children. A courageous person of unusual stamina even for a pioneer, she had not only agreed to the risky and painful experiment, she had ridden some 60 miles by horseback to reach the doctor's home in Danville.

As anaesthetics were unknown at the time, Mrs. Crawford was held down firmly while the doctor went about his business. Her recovery was rapid in spite of the difficult and primitive circumstances, for Dr. McDowell discovered her making her bed five days after surgery. Less than a month later, she saddled up her horse, waved a cheery goodbye and started the 60-mile jog back to her family. The sturdy woman lived for an additional 33 years.

Today, the doctor's home and his apothecary have been restored and are open to the public. Many furnishings of the period are there plus other rare Kentucky items.

The residence is a fine example of the comfort and beauty of many early Kentucky dwellings, with five rooms on the first floor and four on the second. Visitors are especially interested in a small bedroom on the second floor over the dining room. It is believed to be the room where the famous experiment was performed. A special attraction in the consultation room off the porch are the instruments used by Dr. McDowell in his operations on James K. Polk, later eleventh President of the United States.

Adjacent to the house is the apothecary, much as it was during its years of operation by Dr. McDowell and his associates. It is a two-room building; the back room served as the doctors' office, and the front room was the pharmacy where apprentices prepared medicines. It is fitted with a collection of 200 pieces of 18th and 19th-century equipment, including such things as a leech jar, apothecary balances and various medicine bottles and jars.

An interesting clue to the personality of the hearty pioneer doctor is that he apparently was unimpressed with his thought-to-be-impossible performance. It was nine years before he made public a formal report of the incident. But he did not stop there in his explorations into surgery, as he successfully performed the same type of operation seven more times in his lifetime.
