Waveland's Farmers' Museum Can Bring Cash To Kentucky

By Norma Eckdahl

Would Kentucky be interested in acquiring a new industry with an annual payroll of $1,200,000?

Certainly Chambers of Commerce across the Commonwealth would jump at such a chance.

But they might overlook the fact that Dr. Hambleton Tapp, director of the Kentucky Life Museum at Waveland, is developing a plan that might provide the equivalent economic impact.

Dr. Tapp, now working toward adding a Farmers Museum to the attractions already at the University of Kentucky's history museum on its South Farm in Fayette county, is interested primarily in preserving part of the state's past for the future.

But even a historian can't ignore economics.

And, if Waveland with a Farmers Museum added could be worked into a tourist attraction as popular as the Farmers Museum at Cooperstown, N. Y., it would equal a business that paid its employees $1 200,000 a year.

Of course, Dr. Tapp realizes that Waveland still is a way off from direct competition with the village of six museums at Cooperstown. However, it could be moving in that direction. As the director of Colonial Williamsburg, which brings the state of Virginia $43 million a year in gas, beverage and licensing taxes.

Look at some of the facts and figures. The U. S. Department of Commerce reports that if a community can attract an average of 24 tourists a day, all through the year, it has the economic equivalent of an industry with an annual payroll of $100,000. This estimate is based on an assumption that each tourist would spend an average of $12 during a day in the area.

The best known farmers museum in the country, the one at Cooperstown, draws more than 100,000 persons each year.

On the $12-a-day basis, this means that it is bringing the New York community $1,200,000 a year.

Or take Colonial Williamsburg.

Virginia Officials report that added revenue from gasoline taxes alone could have justified its restoration, which cost well over $60 million. They point out that to reach Williamsburg, visitors must drive long distances in the state.

A tourist attraction in Fayette county thus would give economic boosts to all areas of Kentucky.

The fact that people do want to visit such places is documented by the popularity of the Cooperstown and Williamsburg projects. Old Sturbridge Village in Massachusetts (which last year had more than 450,000 visitors), Shelburne Museum in Vermont, Cassville Farmers Museum in Wisconsin, and Landis Valley in Pennsylvania.

Dr. Tapp believes a Farmers Museum could be added to Waveland for about $120,000.

All Americans Urged to Insist On Economy

"Following the right course in national fiscal affairs is not alone the decision of government. The will to bend to the job of containing inflationary pressures must spring from all segments of the economy—from business, industry, labor, the people generally," said Cong. George H. Mahon (D-Tex.), Chairman, House Committee on Appropriations.

Writing in NAM Reports, Cong. Mahon continued: "Everybody has a stake in it. Everybody has an obligation to restrain and discipline himself in his economic behavior. No one is unimportant in this business. Men have recognized from the beginning that one of the chief dangers to the stability of populated government is that it will ration out its benefits selectively and unequally."

"Public attitudes—if not ultimately courts of economics—progress in the long run to follow what—to the individual—looks the interests of personal benefit or profit. The action-support and action-opposition of the individual citizen is the ultimate test of economic policy."

"Many of the basic problems are the first results of a series of six decisions to take questions and answers from the floor and answer them. The course is scheduled to be held in the auditorium of the Christianity.

The two booklets are the first in a series of six booklets which will help you find the answers that comes from prayer. Follow what—to the individual—looks the interests of personal benefit or profit. The booklets give logical explanations of the relationship man must have with God before he can find the real meaning of his existence and be satisfied in the immortality of his soul.
