ceed, federal money alone would not solve the pressing problem of the parochial schools and all education in general.

But, the shared time concept may be developed to heal the breach. This is looking at it from a long-range philosophical standpoint. If worst comes to worst, and parochial schools are forced to close, it may be wiser to rent the buildings from the churches and operate them as public schools instead of constructing expensive public buildings all at once. Churches could reserve a portion of the building to do their own religious education classes.

Thus, there are two facets involved--closing of the parochial schools, and the shared time concept. These have the long-range financial problem involved as well as the constitutional question of separation of church and state.

Harry Duncan Is Unique Mixture

Harry Duncan, conservation officer of Nicholas county, is a multi-purpose official of the Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources. In an attempt to preserve the wildlife and natural habitat of the county and insure successful hunting and fishing for Nicholas county sportsmen, he is a unique mixture of law enforcement officer, game management and fisheries agent, conservation education instructor, and public servant.

The primary duty of Duncan is law enforcement. As a law enforcement officer, he checks licenses of sportsmen in Nicholas county. He also makes arrests for violations of game laws and presents the cases in court. Duncan checks approximately 1800 licenses per year and makes about 25 arrests.

Furthermore, he advises local and visiting sportsmen as to hunting and fishing conditions in the county. He informs the hunters and fishermen of the laws, explaining why only what the laws are, but also their reason, and the good that they are doing.

In the area of game management, Duncan's activities include taking game censuses to keep up with population changes; controlling the taking, holding, and transportation of wildlife through permits; preservation and improvement of habitat; opening lands to hunting; and stocking species in the county.

He urges farmers to develop and preserve wildlife habitat and assists them in preparing food plots for their farms.

Furthermore, he supervises the distribution of day-old quail to be raised and released in the county through cooperation with the sportsmen's clubs. About 500 are released each year in the county.

Game management work consists of repairing highway mutilations, anti-littering, control of damage, visitation sightings and tag numbers, and wildlife kill. It also includes helping the state parks and private landowners in industrial projects.

In regard to fisheries, Duncan helps the fishermen check lakes, publish reports and build fish attractors. Each year, Duncan supervises the stocking of game species. Approximately 30 ponds are stocked in Nicholas county yearly.

Public relations, education in safety, and conducting the conservation classes are all part of Duncan's duties. He attends as many meetings as he can in an effort to impress upon the people the value and conservation of all forms wildlife, natural resources in the state, the programs consists of monthly instructions, hunting safety, wildlife identification, archery, skeet shooting, boating and water safety, etc. In addition, the program includes summer camps where Duncan and other officials supervise more intensive study in these areas. There are junior clubs in the county with more than 100 students enrolled.

Mr. Duncan provides information for the daily fishing reports heard over local radio stations. And he attends meetings of sportsmen's clubs, showing films when requested and helping out where necessary.
