Nicholas County Memories

by Lewis P. Scott

In infancy a child first learns to crawl, then to walk, and later to run. He experiences great satisfaction in his progressive accomplishments. The thrill of conquering space becomes one of the greatest joys of childhood. He runs at every opportunity, and his great desire is to go faster and faster.

It is quite natural therefore, that in his childhood dreams he experiences the sensation of flight through the air with no physical effort, motivated only by his desire to fly. There were no limitations. He had only to wish, and he was over hill and dale, free as a bird. Such dreams were real and never to be forgotten. Could it be that there may be a relationship between such dream experiences and what may yet become a reality?

The phenomonal accomplishment of Man's flight to the Moon as so graphically reported by radio and television, was something only dreamed of in ages past. The flight of the spacecraft through outer space was quite similar to the child dream of the weightlessness and unrestrained motion. It remains through space untampered by the many known physical restrictions.

Science may come up with the answer, initially perhaps with a Mind-Mind bodily harness with power and guidance components which will enable the wearer by merely pushing one or more buttons to blast off for any desired objective. However, there is grave doubt that any substitute will ever be devised for the dream vehicle of childhood which are so well remembered by the writer.

Head Start Happenings Reported

On Wednesday, July 23 the Head Start teachers and parents met at the Licking Valley Community Center.

Mrs. Harold McClanahan welcomed all the mothers and explained the duties of the mothers while they were there.

Many useful articles were on display that had been made by the ladies in the area. Six different organized groups meet at the center each month. Many improvements in town are a result of the efforts of the Community Center.

Mrs. Allison and Mrs. McClanahan gave a skit on the trials of a mother entertaining the Homemakers.

On Friday, July 25, three busloads of Head Start children, mothers and teachers went on a field trip. The first stop was at the Duke Zoo at Maysville. A trip across the Ohio River was an extra treat. Then the busses headed for Blue Licks State Park. A picnic lunch was served and the rest of the day was spent in play and exploring.

Looking at the Inside

By John W. Kirk

THE NEW LOOK AT KENTUCKY VILLAGE--PART 1

This is the first of a multi-part story about the Kentucky Village Treatment Center for juveniles located in Fayette County. There have been many stories, most of them uncomplimentary, written about the village in the past few years and the Kentucky Village personnel invariably have told me that the image that was presented by those stories was either inaccurate or has been changed over the past year.

As I had never been to Kentucky Village before this summer, the only image I had of it was that which had been created by the various newspaper accounts that I have read, plus the various bits of gossip that perpetually run rampant in social circles. So that I could compare my pre-conceived concept with the picture I would personally see, I jotted down the way Kentucky Village appeared in mind before I had ever been there, and what I expected contrasted almost completely with what I found.

I expected to find a hot, unkept, littered and decaying farm, but I found instead, a shaded, well-mowed, clean, and inviting campus.

I expected to find ill-clad, dirty, under-nourished and neglected young criminals, but I found instead, adequately-clothed, reasonably clean, properly-fed, and thoroughly supervised young adults and children.

I looked for the incompetent staff and workers that I had read about, but saw the opposite.

What I am going to tell you about is what I have seen and what I have seen represents not a day of sightseeing and interviewing, but rather, ten weeks of personal, daily contact with the approximately 225 boys and 115 girls currently undergoing treatment at KV, as it is called by the children.

Twenty major buildings, some of them new, most of them old, including a school, administration building, a dining room, multipurpose building which provides space for a chapel, laundry, and barber shop, boys' cottages and girls' cottages, and residences for the Assistant Superintendent, Superintendent, and Maintenance Supervisor, are attractively situated within an 80-acre area on the 300-acre campus and currently provide a home for approximately 340 girls and boys, making Kentucky Village the largest treatment center for juveniles in the state. However, the number of youth currently in the village represents a steady decrease in the population there, as the Kentucky Department of Child Welfare strongly feels, according to its Commissioner, Joe Prather, that treatment is and will be more effective in smaller centers of no more than 40-50 youth.

Compare the population of Kentucky Village (340) with Jessamine (47), Jefferson County (43), Daniel Boone Boy's Camp in Boone County (43), Barkley Boys' Camp in Marshall County (38), Woodsbend Boys' Camp in Morgan County (23), Frenchburg Boys' Center in Menifee County (11), and the Kentucky Children's Home (76), and it is at once apparent that if Mt. Rushmore is a great work of art for its magnitude (at least), then the problems and operational difficulties at Kentucky Village are greater than at other centers, simply because there are more of them, if for other reasons.

Take 200 boys whose various problems range from truancy to arson, glue-sniffing to auto theft, grand larceny to homelessness, put them together, and you can readily see that the task of providing a meaningful treatment direction to their lives will be very difficult indeed. Take 100 girls with similarly diverse problems and difficulties.

This is the challenge that continually faces the staff at Kentucky Village. Are they meeting that challenge successfully? Only the future success or failure of the KV graduates will provide the answer. In the meantime, the words of Mr. Charles Bonta, Assistant to the Director of Social Services, are encouraging. "We have a great staff here and one of the best treatment programs in the country for an institution this size." One is further reassured by Miss Victoria Norton, a teacher, who told me, "I have seen the best results of the treatment program in the attitudes of children with whom I work. They now seem to look upon Kentucky Village as a place where they can solve their problems rather than 'just doing time.'" A quote I heard quite often when I first came to the village (14 months ago)."

BILL BAILEY won't you please come home. I need a dollar to put on a lay-away coat at Lermans before Aug. 7. The sale ends Wednesday night. Shop Lermans. 7-31-1tcg.
