TOOLS OF THE TRADE—after taking a height reading with an altimeter Mary Jean can estimate for a landowner the volume of marketable logs a tree will produce.

"LUMBERJILL"

by Becky Kelly
Dept. of Public Information

Western Kentucky landowners who sought the advice of the Department of Natural Resources' Division of Forestry this summer talked about their trees with a Lumberjill, rather than a traditional lumberjack.

Mary Jean Cook, 20, a senior forestry major from the University of Montana, was assigned to the Department's District 7 with headquarters in Mayfield.

Mary Jean upon request ran preliminary examinations of private woodland and worked with the owners for the most productive management of their timber.

WHITE PINE SEEDLINGS are checked periodically. Three state nurseries raise nearly 10 million seedlings annually for sale to private landowners.

THE SIZE OF THESE TREES waiting to be processed in a saw mill near Mayfield gives some credibility to Western Kentuckians' claim that clean fresh air in their part of the state enhances the growth of trees.
