Teach the Bible In the Schools?

The Bible may be taught again in the schools of Washington, D.C.

For many years it was understood by educators that schools should emphasize the development of right attitudes. Every one agreed that sound principles morally should be taught along with the three R's.

However, a new philosophy of education took over some while ago and the teaching of morality, literacy, and civility of character was thrown out—with results that can be seen everywhere in our country.

Of course, the blame is not that of the schools alone. Our whole society must be held accountable for the fact that the really worthwhile values of life have been degraded in the pursuit of material abundance.

Early this year, the residents of Washington — our national capital — were damaged when it was reported that a 15-year-old boy had been shot to death in school by a gun in the hands of a friend.

On the same day a 14-year-old boy was shot in the top while playing football as he and a fellow student engaged in a friendly football game in a school corridor.

Pulse were ordered to patrol all of the city's junior and senior high schools.

But this is obviously not the way to solve the problem. The condition must be remedied by a change in the attitudes of students — not just by prevention of violence.

A committee has studied the situation and has now recommended that the Bible be re-introduced into the schools as a part of the English courses to be read as literature.

The committee has also proposed that the schools make a definite effort to teach students "positive attitudes," such as respectability, respect for the rights and truth, and faith in the teachings of the Bible.

The program of Bible reading and the inculcation of desirable traits of character has been endorsed by school administrators, the teachers union, and PTA's.

Some of us might have preferred that the legislation be presented as "faith in the Bible as part of the curriculum," but the committee was restrained in this by some court decisions.

Anyway, maybe we're on the way to a major improvement in education. Good teachers have always known that the best way to help their students achieve strength of character is to have them be subjected to their efforts by obstacles thrown in their way by authorities who have sometimes seemed to be oblivious to the most vital matters while stressing what was less important.

Is it too much to hope that our schools will be able to recognize the fact that "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge?"

As the students of Washington schools read the Bible will they perhaps learn that "to depart from evil is understanding?"

Nothing but good can come from exposing the minds of students to the great truths of the scriptures.

Perhaps this idea should be considered for adoption in other cities, too.

"The increase in reported cases of measles is due primarily to the termination of the Federal Vaccination Assistance Project last year which greatly curtailed the supply of the relatively expensive measles vaccine to county health departments throughout the nation," he said.

On July 7, a limited supply of regular measles vaccine was made available in all county health departments for immediate immunization of susceptible children in the state. Dr. Hernandez said, "The only age restriction on this vaccine is that the child must be at least a year old."

An effective vaccine against regular measles has been available since 1963, and the state law now requires measles immunization of children.

As with diphtheria, tetanus, polio and smallpox, the child is eligible to enroll in school without first presenting a certificate from a physician or the county health department stating that the child has been immunized against regular measles, or that he has had the disease.

"A statewide measles eradication program had almost controlled regular measles in Kentucky by 1968," Dr. Hernandez said, but added that "the disease is on the increase again, not only in Kentucky, but in other areas of the nation as well."

"During the first six months of this year," he said, "530 cases of regular measles were reported in Kentucky, compared to 38 for the same period last year. Two of the cases resulted in death."

DEPT ANNOUNCES DEER HUNTING DATES
Seven Saturdays—three for bow hunters and four for gun hunters—have been set aside for the 1970 deer hunt at the Lexington-Blue Grass Army Depot.

Women will be allowed on the reservation Oct. 17, 24, 31 while Nov. 7, 14, 21, 28 is reserved for gun hunters.

People desiring to hunt at the Blue Grass Activity south of Richmond should mail a postcard (one postcard per person) to: Chairman, Wildlife Management Subcommittee, Building 519, Lexington-Blue Grass Army Depot, Lexington, KY 40507.

To be eligible for a hunting permit the card must contain the following information: name of hunter (one name only), address and method of hunting—bow or shotgun. All cards must be postmarked no later than Oct. 1, 1970. Violation of these requirements will disqualify applicants.

A lottery system, whereby all eligible cards are placed in a container and drawn, will be the method used to fill hunting spaces and dates.

All hunters must possess a valid Kentucky hunting license and deer tag. Hunters will be required to pay a $5.00 fee to the depot. The money will be used to improve the depot's wildlife habitat. Money will not be accepted from hunters until notification by the depot of their lottery selection and the specific hunting date.

Deer hunting at the Army installation is a joint program of the Kentucky Department of Wildlife and U.S. Department of Fish and Wildlife.

Rubella Vaccine Available State-Wide

FRANKFORT, Ky.—Kentucky has immunization program cooperation to control both German measles and regular measles, but the difference in the diseases is puzzling to most people.

Dr. F. Hernandez, director of epidemiology for the state Department of Health said, "The so-called German or '3-day' measles can cause fetal death or birth defects in infants born to women who are exposed to the disease early in pregnancy."

"In children the disease is very mild, lasts only three or four days, and is difficult to distinguish from other mild rash illnesses," he said.

"For that reason, children are given the vaccine regardless of a history of rubella-like illness."

"Vaccine against rubella (German measles) is relatively new, and before June 1970, was very scarce."

"All county health departments in the state now have sufficient vaccine for German measles immunization of all prepubertal children over one year of age," Dr. Hernandez said.

"Rubella vaccine is not given to pregnant women because of a theoretical risk of the vaccine virus to the unborn baby," he said.

"Women of childbearing age can be considered for rubella immunization only if they are susceptible to rubella as shown by a rubella
