

Building Future Citizens

As reports of increasing violence, crime, and just plain hell-raising on the part of American youth fill the news columns, so grow the complaints and criticisms of our schools, teachers, and educational methods.

It should always be remembered, however, that most of our youth today are doing very well indeed, although, unfortunately, they do not always attract as much public attention as the wrong-doers.

By the same token, most of our teachers are performing admirably well, and, in fact, are almost mounting odds very well, sometimes, I would seem, to opinion. Most of our teachers, also believe in America, believe in our youth, and have confidence in the future of both. Such a teacher in Dr. Max Rafferty, superintendent of public instruction and director of education for the State of California. In answer to critics who complained that California schools were too patriotic, Dr. Rafferty had this to say:

"There is a strange state of mind to be found in certain circles in our land today—a sort of sick campaign of whipping and interference to the effect that a patriot is somehow an enemy of the country."

International peace and goodwill, that a man who loves his country must necessarily hate other countries, and that therefore we should not peddle the teaching in our schools of the great hero stories of our past, and the wonderful songs and poems which breathe such unashamed love and admiration for the land which our ancestors came through so many legions of stormy sea to transform into a nation which in today's wonder and glory of the human race.

"It has been said in recent months by a high appointed official of California that the idea of America being 'sacred soil' is a lot of paranoid patriotism."

"I am sure that to this gentleman the soil of his native land is not sacred, that it's just dirt, no different from the soil of any other land. That is his privilege."

"But I want to make my own position clearer."

"So long as we have teachers such as Dr. Rafferty, we shall look with confidence to the future of our youth, and of a free America."

MERCURY VAPOURS

By Warren R. Fisher

The article that followed was written several years ago by Ed Hladky, Courier-Journal Garden Editor, and I had filed it away literally, anyway it is interesting now. My only trouble with putting it to use will be getting through the nose to the grapevine.

GRAPES under growing in the home garden are more popular than ever. Not only are they used in the commercial vineyard, but also in the home garden. There are many varieties of grapes, and each has its own characteristics. The most popular are the table grapes, and these are the ones that we eat. They are also used for wine, and for raisins.
