Lake Carnico Produces "Best in State"

"BEST IN STATE" AWARD WINNER--W.H. Hedges, of 256 Parrish Avenue, Paris, is shown with awards he received from Sports Afield magazine for having won the distinction of winning the "Best In State" citation for catching a one-pound, two-ounce Redear Sunfish, the largest taken in the state during 1969. Hedges caught his prize fish in Lake Carnico last June 2. He's shown holding his parchment certificate, a sterling silver insignia, a framed award and a sleeve patch that were presented to him commemorating his achievement. Sports Afield's state fishing awards program embraces all 50 states, encouraging fishing with sporting tackle and to give recognition to meritorious catches on state rather than national level.

Mrs. Harold Rice. Gray has finished his army service.

Bro. Rice had charge of the worship service Monday afternoon. He had made a recording of special music, Bible reading, etc. Each patient could plainly hear this from his or her room.

Sterling Rice was busy Sunday afternoon entertaining his folks, the Harneys and Smarts from Lexington. They made good use of the piano and it was very nice to hear his little five year old granddaughter sing.

Agree or Not,

I Say What I Think

By S. C. Van Curon

FRANKFORT--While partisan politics never raised its ugly head in this session of the General Assembly until last week, an undercurrent of politics has been the controlling influence all the time.

They have failed to come to grips with Kentucky's tangled tax structure. Mention the word tax and they scattered like a covey of quail fired into with a double-barreled muzzle loader.

Other controversial issues not settled are daylight saving time, and Sunday closing. They finally laid the controversial professional negotiations (PN) bill to rest on the clerk's desk in the Senate last Wednesday. This latter measure brought more debate and consumed more time in different ways than the governor's $3.1 billion budget bill.

There are several bills in the legislature to repeal or change the 1965 rollback tax bill in various degrees. One has been offered for outright repeal. Another would permit two 10 cent tax increases for schools in successive years, and still another would permit gradual increases until a ceiling of 60 cents is reached on schools.

The only budge from hard opposition to property taxes has been permitting six school districts to adjust their rates to coincide with the adjacent rate of 1965.

The Kentucky Education Association package brought 95 Frankfort in a bushel basket can be carried home in a tea cup. They got only a fraction of the increased money asked, plus some small fringe benefit bills. Their strong effort to amend the rollback tax bill has come to a sudden stop.

The legislators did increase the tax of whisky 64 cents a gallon, but they dared not nibble on property taxes. A few brave souls dared to introduce measures to increase the tax on cigarettes, but the strong Farm Bureau lobby repelled each effort with a wave of the hand.

More dust was raised in newspapers over the controversial bail-bond bill that would license the bondsmen. A bill was passed but about all it did was levy a small license fee and put them under control of the State Insurance Department of Frankfort. Stronger legislation is at the hands of local courts than is provided in the bail-bond bill passed. This seemed a move to pass responsibility from local authorities who were not enforcing present statutes to another place. Just get the problem out of local responsibility.

The press got just about as unpopular as the Kentucky Education Association over editorials appearing in at least two of the state's newspapers. Others were automatically guilty by being in the same business. Anti-newspaper sentiment ran high. A resolution to investigate the accuracy of newspaper editorials was prepared but was not introduced after Senator Tom Garrett of Paducah castigated the newspapers for "inaccurate editorials and false accusations." This battle of words was generated over the bailbond bill.

When Gov. Loule B. Nunn came with his $3.1 billion budget bill the second day of the session, he knocked the Democrats off their offensive feet and they never recovered their balance. His clincher was leaving $18 million in uncommitted funds to be allocated at the pleasure of the legislature.

Campaign pledges to eliminate the five per cent sales tax from prescription drugs cost about $7.5 million and the Democrats had to scramble to make this up in the budget revision. They gained $2 million by skipping the state's contribution for one year to the teacher retirement fund.

Awaiting final action in the Senate is the governor's $48.3 million general obligation bond issue to go on the November ballot.

Even bills permitting local governments to increase taxes through referendum have been in "no-no" with legislators.

Most of the major public problems facing legislators, taxes and education, have been pushed aside by creating study commissions to report to the 1972 General Assembly.

Naturally, the Legislative Research Commission gets the chore, but the principal reason for using this solution to the problem is that 1971 is a gubernatorial election year and no one wants to face this responsibility.

The next vital issue of the final week is who will emerge as potential candidates as the Democrat standard bearers in next year's election.
