FRANKFORT—Lt. Gov. Wendell Ford, who has announced his candidacy for the Democratic nomination for governor next year, has given no indication that he will choose a running mate or try to slate a group for the other constitutional offices.

Following his announcement May 9, Ford told a newsmen that he had no announcement to make about a running mate or others he would like to see run with him for the other offices.

Although U.S. Circuit Judge and former Gov. Bert T. Combs has not made any official announcement, he is expected to make an official statement after his resignation, to be in the judgeship becomes final June 5.

When House Speaker Julian Carroll made his announcement for lieutenant governor next year, he said it would be a running mate of Combs, indicating that Combs would become a candidate for governor after he leaves the judgeship.

Intimates of Ford here indicate that he may run in the primary without any tie. Many politicians have reasoned that this would not alienate any candidates for the minor offices and probably would benefit the gubernatorial candidate.

While Combs is still in an announced candidate his many friends are out exposing his potential candidacy and trying to get organizations in some of the counties.

Ford and his friends also are busy at this time.

Meanwhile, a spokesman for Gov. Louie B. Nunn's administration said the governor hoped to be in a position to make an announcement in June.

This announcement is expected to be the candidate that his administration will support next year for governor.

The spokesman also indicated that the governor is still trying to prevail upon U.S. Senator John Sherman Cooper to be the Republican Standard Bearer. Many Republican politicians hold the belief that the Senator's popularity would swing him into the governor's office, or at least be the most formidable candidate that the party could choose.

Some have mentioned Fourth District Congressman Eugene Snyder as a candidate for governor. However, the administration spokesman said that Snyder has not given any indication whatever that he would like to run for governor. Many feel that he has a safe congressional district and he had rather stay there. He is very popular with the Democrats in Northern Kentucky.

There's one thing certain, Northern Kentucky will not be a stepchild in next year's races. Both Republicans and Democrats are seeking a statewide office. Right now, both seem to be hunting a candidate for Attorney General from that area.

County Judge Andrew Jolly has been mentioned frequently as a potential candidate for lieutenant governor or attorney general for the Democrats.

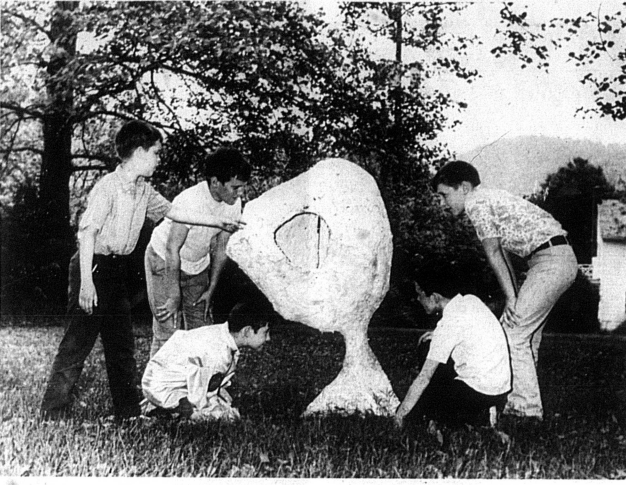

In case Senator Cooper doesn't run, Gov. Nunn has some good prospects here in Highway Commissioner Eugene Grass, Parks Commissioner Jim Host, Public Service Commissioner Tom Emberton, and former Parks Commissioner Robert Gable. Gable is getting plenty of support from some.

As to the Democrats who are expected to seek state offices, they seem to be waiting until the political picture clears somewhat. State Treasurer Thomas Stovall will be a candidate, but also isn't making any firm statement as to whether the office. She at one time indicated she had some ambition to run for governor, but Carroll's announcement including Combs has apparently changed her mind. She also spoke about lieutenant governorship.

Most observers here expect her to run for Secretary of State, or the health department. State Auditor Mary Louise Fouss is expected to seek a full term in that office.

Drewell Davis is making contacts with backers across the state for support as a Democratic candidate for treasurer.

Today, there has been little apparent about most of the other minor offices. Henderson County School Superintendent Lewis Johnson is likely to become a candidate for superintendent of public instruction.

patience and relieve tension. That may very well be, but American horticulturists consider the effort more beneficial when it produces fruit and in a shorter length of time.
Right now, according to UK Extension horticulturist Robert L. Shepherd, is a good time to set out dwarfs in the orchard, or even in the backyard. These mighty little trees require only about 15 square feet of space per tree to grow and flourish.
Dwarf fruit trees can be both decorative and beneficial, and most always bear in two years after transplanting. Orchards recommend that at least two varieties of the same species be transplanted because the best crop of fruit can only be had when there is cross pollination.
