prevented their destructive activities, the homeowner will be wise to become acquainted with the insect, its habits and way of life. There are a number of Extension and U.S. Department of Agriculture bulletins on the subject available in the office of most County Extension Agents. These bulletins not only give the life history of termites but also detail the best methods of thwarting their designs to eat property owners out of house and home.

The Terrible Termite

LEXINGTON, KY. - Termites, according to entomologists, have been earth for more than 250 million years and coincidentally enough, in the United States alone, annually cause more than 250 million dollars in property damage.

Feasting voraciously on insatiable appetite and indefatigable energy, they will eat almost anything containing cellulose or wood fiber. In a pinch, they will gnaw aluminum or asphalt, and can and will bore through lead shielding or as much as five inches of concrete to get a meal. They have been known to tackle and scar stainless steel while on their foraging expeditions. Termites that cause the most trouble in the United States are the subterranean variety that live in colonies underground and feed on whatever they can find containing cellulose. They are particularly fond of the domicile of man, especially those with central heating and warm basements. And once established under such structures, they can do enormous damage in a very short time. Therefore all homes containing wood, rural or urban, should be inspected at least once a year for infestation of these insects.

There are several ways of fighting and warding off termites and researchers are ever searching for new and more effective weapons. Since these insects leave scent trails to guide their companions to a feast, scientists are trying to duplicate this secretion in the hope of leading the predators to prepared body traps. The scientists are also exploring a biological remedy whereby straggling termites are infected with bacteria-carrying fungi and sent back to the colony to start fatal epidemics.

Currently, the most widely used method of termite control is the poisoning of the soil around houses and treating the wood foundations with repellents. This is an effective method, but not always completely successful.

Being very resourceful, termites have been known to climb trees and power lines, cross to the eaves or walls of houses, and start eating down instead of up.

Also, according to one authority on the subject, turning out rock and roll music will help prevent termite infestation. In experiments at a San Francisco nightclub, an entomologist found that the lively strains of a blues band spurred termites to increased activity, but rock and roll tunes, he added, caused them to work even harder and literally go into a frenzy of chewing wood.

more for soft goods, food and services but held back somewhat in their purchases of big-ticket items.

However, despite the fact that they did not go all-out in their spending, they made it a good year for local merchants, who chalked up a sales total of $5,727,000.

The survey gives each community a performance rating based upon the estimated full capability of the area competing with it.

This is done through an "Index of buying power," a weighted figure involving income, population and sales.

Nicholas County is given an index rating of .0021, which is the percent of the nation's business it is believed able to produce.

Since less than that was done during the past year, .0016 percent, it is concluded that a fair amount of the local purchasing potential has not yet been attained.
