to oil and grease. Stains easily.
INLAD SHEET VINYL—Fairly expensive, but highly durable and fairly quiet underfoot. The felt-backed variety is recommended for suspended floors only. The asbestos-backed kind may be used on all floors. Colored particles of designs extend below the surface and will not rub off. Valuable for use in areas where scuffing is likely. Comes in three gauges or thicknesses. May be used on suspended or on on-grade floors. Can take long, hard use, but everyday family traffic will leave it scratched, dinged and scuffed making it appear worn before its useful life is over. Dyes and scrapes easily. Comes in three gauges or thicknesses. In general, the thicker the gauge, the greater the durability underfoot comfort and insulating properties. Make sure you know which thickness you are getting.

NOTO VINYL—A flooring whose relatively low durability is offset by low price and availability in a wide variety of patterns and colors. May be used on suspended or on on-grade floors only. Less quiet and less comfortable underfoot than inlaid sheet vinyl or linoleum, but easier to install. Its backing can be harmed by most liquids. Surface is not very resistant to alkalies, alcohols and petroleum-based solvents, but has good resistance to acids, salt solutions, oils and bleaches.

SOLID VINYL TILE—The most expensive covering, but elegant and fairly quiet underfoot. Very durable. Broad selection of colors and patterns. Won't fade. Highly resistant to dents, oil, and household chemicals. Hard to stain. Easy to clean. Waxes to high gloss.
VINYL ASBESTOS TILE—Linoleum's closest competitor in terms of quality and price. Not quiet underfoot. Very high durability. May be used on all floors. Broad selection of colors and patterns. Won't fade. Medium resistance to dents. High resistance to oil and grease. Easy to clean. Waxes to high gloss despite its grainy surface. More brittle than linoleum and does not resist stains as well.
