Council Votes To Improve Drainage In Dorseyville

By Rob Lane

Several Dorseyville residents prompted by last Saturday's three-inch rain, asked council to install proper drainage controls on Dorsey Avenue at its meeting Monday night.

Some Dorseyville residents had assumed the responsibility of building a wall on one side of the street, however, this would have caused all run-off water to flow through Bascom Sorrell Jr.'s yard.

Council agreed to attend to the problem immediately. Other Dorseyville residents complained of Southern States Co. cooperative dumping chemicals from tractor tires into the street. Council had received previous complaints and had notified the Southern States manager, apparently with no permanent result. They decided to notify the company once more before citing it to court.

The council decided to have a committee investigate complaints by Roger Banta that odor and paint dust from Junior Lehman's paint shop was a nuisance. Banta also asked to have the alley beside his home repaired.

The police report for June was: Number of Arrests, 31; Number Fines, 18; Fines Collected, $500; Parking Meter Deposits, $326.40.

On June 24 Spec. 4 Wilson completed 6 months of training at the Defense Language Institute at Monterey, Calif. Upon graduation, he received his M.O.S. as interpreter-translator of Spanish.

4-H Horseshow

Kentucky 4-H horsemen (and horsewomen) are invited to compete this summer in the National Youth Horse Congress, the only event of the kind for youth in the United States.

The Congress is scheduled Aug. 4-13 in Dallas, Texas, according to Dr. Gary Potter, horse specialist with the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture's Cooperative Extension Service. Kentucky 4-H'ers can compete in any of four events at the Congress if certified to represent the state and in any of three events where certification is not required.

Changes in Farm Programs Regulations Aimed At Improving Farm Incomes

A change in government regulations broadening eligibility rules for farm commodities under government loan programs has been cited as one more step toward improved farm incomes.

"It's another change in line with the policy of adding to the freedom of farmers to handle their farm operations as they think best and operate more effectively in the marketplace," said Mr. Fuqua, Kentucky Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation (ASC) Committee which administers USDA farm programs in Kentucky.

Three other illustrations of how recent changes in regulations are opening more choices to farmers were cited: "With prior approval, loan commodities may be delivered to points beyond the customary delivery point. Soybean, corn, and oats loan rates are to be based on county-where-stored instead of facility loan program."

"To non-farmers, these probably sound like technical" Fuqua said, "Even farmers who aren't directly affected may not pay much attention, and not every farmer is affected by every change. But the cumulative effect for agriculture as a whole is very important."

"With more freedom to choose their crops and acreage, as provided in the Agricultural Act of 1970, and with more options in storing and marketing their crops as changes in regulations are providing, farmers are better able to improve their net income. Improvement of farm income is essential. Farmers must have assurance of more equitable returns for their big commitment of land, money, time, and technological know-how," Fuqua said.

The latest change in regulations will permit producers to enter into contracts to sell cotton, grain and similarly handled commodities without loss of eligibility of these commodities for Commodity Credit Corporation loans.

Eligibility is dependent on the producer retaining control, risk of loss, and title of the commodity.

This broadening of the regulations will permit more freedom to a producer in marketing his commodity at the best price obtainable, Mr. Fuqua commented.

Regulations governing release of commodity under loan to buyers remain unchanged, and the CCC's security agreement in the
