

Time To Revolt Is Now

Stories of a taxpayer revolt making good headway in the belligerently inclined, but, as a practical matter, when the operating expenses of government rise, there is no alternative to higher taxes. The time to protest is before the spending starts. For example, it is now generally conceded that extensive changes are to be made in the nation's health care system. How costly these changes will be depends upon how deeply the government enters the health care field.

A spokesman for the Nixon administration has warned that a federally-funded national health insurance program would triple the federal government's tax bill for federal health services and still add $15 billion to the government's budget deficit. It would mean that the taxes required to pay for such services for an average household would rise to $1,271 a year from the present $400, according to the spokesman. This is the estimated price of an all-out government health care program being proposed in Congress. Other less costly health insurance programs are also being advocated. One of them, offered by the medical profession would finance health care costs through a system of tax credits while retaining the principal features of the traditional American medical system which has led to the highest quality of health care ever known. The medical profession's private clinics and would preserve the principles of voluntarism and free choice, both for doctor and patient.

Pathway To The Stars

The U.S. national debt stands at nearly 400 billion. In an effort to reduce this figure and to make more comprehensible to ordinary citizens the details of the appropriations Committee of the U.S. Senate, Senator Allen Ellender, set his staff to work on computers to work that many confusing details.

VAPOURS

Ever spent one of those utterly relaxed, maybe useless days, doing only that which was required, advocated. One of them, offered by the medical profession would finance health care costs through a system of tax credits while retaining the principal features of the traditional American medical system which has led to the highest quality of health care ever known.

The farther the government goes into the health business, the higher the tax bill. Those who oppose higher taxes should oppose federal national health insurance schemes that would grant confederate powers of taxation to government. The time to revolt is now, not later.

Agree Or Not

Nearly everything but money is limited supply. This is especially true when prices go higher and higher, and it takes more and more dollars to buy the same amount of goods. The result is inflation continues long enough and the dollar loses its value. It is time to take the money out of circulation. It would take about 27,995 miles, or 4.5 trips from New York to Los Angeles, to place one dollar in circulation.
