

An Interesting Experiment

The philosophy of taking "him or giving "to each according to his needs" sounds humane and has had a substantial following among socialists, communist and idealistic youth.

A New York high school teacher conducted an interesting experiment with his students. He suggested to them that they take away 20 grade points from those who made a grade of 95 on a test, giving them to those who made only 55 on the same test.

Agree Or Not

lashed with his students as to the probable results if he were to actually apply this socialist-communist philosophy. The first result would be that the highly productive students would lose the incentive to work for higher grades.
