and junk collectors in the world are weekly newspapermen. I don't advise any youngster to get into the weekly field. He might pick up some of those nasty habits and then his mother would blame me. And I wouldn't want to interfere with his going into bigime newspapering where he would get much money, bored, fame and a duodinal ulcer. Then when he falls down and break both legs, he won't come running to

are journalists turned loose

Encouraged by the journalism schools and, since most kids these days want to start at the top, we aren't bothered much by youngstes wanting to develop into hotstick pool slarks and crackerbarrel legends.

It's all in the way you see it. And big city newspapering gives you such a poor view . . .

You can follow the crowd But there's not much cheer In always looking At someone's rear.

A classification of the state clops, up the war garters anymore?

I haven't owned a pair in years — not since I saw the patter to end all garters. This cat, a slick master sergeant working in headquarters, was an immuculate dresser, who bathed and changed his clothes twice a day and used like juice to give himself a fragrant air to match his fraerant personality.

At first I thought somebody was pulling my leg. Nobody goes to that much trouble just to murder a mouse. But I'm a sucker for nutty ideas and couldn't pass up reading on:

ewhite back came a blurb from an advertising agency trying to get some free publicity for a client. Seems a company in Indianapolis has invented a contraption straight out of the Spanish Inquisition for dispatching mice with a flair.

I have used my simple handy-dandy drowning attachment on cats — a gunny sack weighted by rocks — but had never thought of using such a sophisticated method on mice. The blurb continues:

with mice. They usually starve to death waiting for a crumb to hit the floor. When we do set a trap out of pity for the things, the most trouble is finding someone brave enough to take the icky things away from the scene of to take the sky things away from the scene of musace.

We have the cleanest mouse tapps in town. Mother would never part out a trap unless a nimber work of the state of the s

The thing does have possibilities. Not, perceived as a mouse exterminator, but a media of entertainment. If he will include a supply of mice with each unit sold, the things with each unit sold, the things with the perceived of the sold of the s

With a little promotion as a companion piece to water beds and incense candles, this fad could replace traditional forms of American entertainment such as muggings, smoking pot, drag racing and car stripping.
