Law and regulations governing the fish and wildlife were designed to protect and perpetuate fish and wildlife resources of the state while at the same time allowing the hunter and the fisherman, the photographer and the viewer the pleasures of their favorite pursuits. Not one law, so far as we can determine, was made for the protection of any individual or group of individuals. Rather they all were enacted so that animals and birds might be protected and along with them their counterpart, the species homo sapiens, many of which like to hunt and fish, and enjoy the great outdoors in its entirety. Most hunters and fishermen, we believe, feel pretty much the same way about those treated with making the rules and regulations governing wildlife. That's why it is so difficult to understand a great number of persons are arrested each year for hunting or fishing without a license or with an improper license.
