

Travel — it's big business in Kentucky

...and the Kentucky Department of Public Information helps by promoting the state's many attractions nationally.

The photography lab in a busy place where black-and-white and color travel shots of scenic Kentucky are prepared for the department's advertising section and for national publications.

One-minute commercials for Kentucky's travel attractions are taped in the department. Live interviews transcribed "on the spot," conveying travelers' own words about Kentucky, are used in prepping tapes for an all-night radio show from Louisville reaching 40 states.

Telling the travel story in creative art and multiple layouts for magazine and newspaper advertisements is the art department's contribution to the Travel Division's promotion work.

Answering all those cards and letters from hundreds of prospective travelers each day is an important final touch to the entire promotion. Each question is different, each gets special treatment and the service is prompt.

Long ago, according to an old European folktale, there was a vigorous old cobbler, well paid the century marks to age, who could be found at his bench every day.

Comeback of kraut

On one side of his bench he habitually kept a dish of fried kraut — on the other side a dish of raw kraut. From time to time as he worked, he would take a bit from one or the other of these dishes and attributed his longevity to eating this fermented product of chopped cabbage.

This is an age-proven tale, but science and nutritionists have known for a long time that sauerkraut does indeed have certain health-giving properties.

Now the vigorous aroma of trying kraut warts from many kitchens across the land. Kraut juice can be had in some soft drink containers, and restaurants offer it with wieners, sauerkraut, sauerkraut, and beer.

It is said that during the Civil War, after taking Chamberburg, Gen. Lee demanded that the city fathers provide him with 25 barrels of kraut. On his way to Gettysburg, he had noticed some of his men showing signs of scurvy and wanted this kraut as an antiscorbutic.

There was a time when the family cellar was not considered complete unless a full truck of kraut had been "put down" for winter use.
