

Slowed rate of migration helps account for birth rate increase

Kentucky's population grew at 1.2 percent per cent in 1960 (3,046,787) and 1970 (3,225,490) according to the 1970 census. The rate of increase was 1.5 percent in 1961 and 1.3 percent in 1962, according to the 1970 edition of Kentucky Vital Statistics distributed recently by the state Department of Health's Division of Research, Planning and Statistics.

Bill Mackey, division director, says a slowed rate of migration, particularly among young people, is the reason for the apparent discrepancy. The same factor also helps explain why Kentucky's live birth rate was up from 17.9 per 1,000 population in 1969 (57,443 live births reported) to 18.7 per 1,000 in 1970 (60,233 live births).

"An increased birth rate is getting through to a larger number of young people are staying in the state," said Mackey. "Rather, more young people are staying in the state, and they're having children."

The rate of report shows rates that are basically consistent with national trends. Illegitimacy in 1970 was 18.7 per 1,000 live births, as compared to 17.9 per 1,000 live births in 1969. In 1970, illegitimacy was 18.7 per 1,000 live births, as compared to 17.9 per 1,000 live births in 1969.

May brings outdoor duties

Beauty has its own reason for being, or Victor Hugo said, "The beautiful is useful as the useful." Maybe this great French writer got his inspiration from the month of May. He has been right, according to the reports of the Kentucky Agriculture Experiment Station, Lexington, Ky. May is a time of revitalization; also a month that causes one to dream, it is a period of growth and progress, a month that is full of life.

Apids also appear on many parts of the tree, especially on the apple tree. Sprays of malathion are usually quite effective, although repeated applications are necessary on many plants.
