Kentucky afield

By Hope Carlson

Conservation officers are a special breed of men. Instead of sitting behind a desk, they brave rain and snow, sun and heat as they go about their painful, spending almost endless hours protecting Kentucky's wildlife. Conservation officers are servants of the government and of the people in the communities where they live.

This select group of about 130 men is the backbone of the state Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources. They are not only a staunch law enforcement group, they are "pros" in fish and wildlife management, education, and public relation specialists.

These men serve you in a wide and varied program of service. Farm pond stocking, as well as advice on weed control or other problems about your farm pond, is one service they may perform.

If you desire to have a wildlife habitat development program started on your farm, you may contact your local officer who will, along with a game biologist, visit your home and set up such a program for you.

Conservation officers are active in the department's conservation education program, attending meetings in schools and working with Kentucky youth. Every summer they recruit conservation education members from their respective areas to one of three camps operated by the department.

Those who have some type of wildlife as pet or raise wildlife for some reason or other, must have a pet or propagation permit and the conservation officer is the man who will take the necessary steps to obtain such a permit.

Another phase of the officer's work is pollution detection. If and when a pollution problem develops in your area, contact your officer immediately. He will go to the problem area, take water samples for analyzing and see that court action is initiated, if necessary.

Conservation officers are helping to make hunting and fishing better for all Kentuckians. However, you can help too, by confiding in these hard-working men, if you have knowledge of game violations.

The person who poaches game is a thief and is stealing from every license holder as well as from future generations. Your conservation officer is on hand to answer your questions, keep you posted on game and fish laws and to help you avail yourself of the services of the department.

Get to know him better so that he may serve you better.

YOU AND THE DRAFT

By Colonel Taylor L. Davidson

There has not been a proportionate decline in the frequency of congressional inquiries regarding young men who are or who may be vulnerable to the military draft. Quite frankly, we would have expected letters of this type to have dropped to almost nil with the President's pre-announced goal of an all-volunteer army by July, 1973.

It is understandable why some of our peers express written concern when they have a son who has become a "draft" resister and may be vulnerable to the "draft" because of a low "lottery" number. Often what bothers them most could be answered by a local "draft" board. We would like to share with you one example.

The father of a young man, whom we shall identify as Ernie, wrote a letter to his congressman. He was not opposed to the "draft" or having his son serve in the armed forces. The father wrote that Ernie was in his second year at a state university and he wanted to see his son obtain his degree before military service interruption. The parent said he was afraid his son would never return to college if his studies were interrupted now.

Before responding to the congressman's reply, a member of this staff reviewed Ernie's file. In the review, it was noted that Ernie was born on Aug. 15, 1952. He graduated from high school in May 1970. In August of the same year there was a letter to the "draft" board informing them he planned to enroll in a state university later in the month. However, his file did not contain any documentation from the university presently, enrolled in college. Had documentation of this type been submitted, the board would have considered Ernie for student deferment.

The Selective Service Regulations currently provide that a young man satisfactorily pursuing a full-time course of study during the 301 regular academic school year is eligible for consideration of a student deferment. For the record, anyone entering a college in the summer of 1971 or thereafter, is not eligible for a student deferment.

We pointed out to the congressman that if Ernie still wanted to be considered for a student deferment, he should promptly request the university to provide the necessary certification that he had enrolled for a full-time course of study during the 1971-72 academic year and was presently satisfactorily pursuing a full-time course of study.

Another thing in his favor at this time was the 1953 year of birth. A "draft" resister born in that year begins his year of prime vulnerability for induction in 1973. Ernie had drawn number 19 in the last national lottery. With this low lottery number and in Class I-A, he had been processed in physical examination. The armed forces examining and entrance station found him acceptable for enlistment.

Should Ernie choose not to document his file for consideration of a student deferment his lottery number is reached in 1973 while he is a full-time student, he would be called to a postponement until the end of the semester.

The information we have given the congressman should alleviate some of the parental concern. Emphasizing first-hand information from the "draft" board and properly documenting, files timely, hopefully will lessen the need of seeking congressional assistance in the future.

STEER SHOW OFFERS BEEF CONFERENCE

Kentucky's future as a cattle feeding state will be the central theme of the beef cattle conference to be held in conjunction with the 1973 Louisville Steer Show.

The conference will be held at the Bourbon Stockyards, the site of this year's Louisville Steer Show. Although the conference theme, "Kentucky—A Cattle Feeding State," is of primary interest to feeders, the meeting is open to all cattlemen.

Along with holding the 1973 show at the Bourbon Stockyards, the committee has also announced that only one division will be offered. In the past, separate shows have been held at the Kentucky Fair and Exposition Center.

The Kentucky Department of Agriculture provides some $12,000 to the Louisville Steer Show for premiums and promotion. A committee comprised of representatives of beef cattle associations, producers, packers, stockyards, the University of Kentucky and the Division of Vocational Agricultural Education manages the show.

A good number of requests for catalogues and entry forms have been received, leading us to believe that the 1973 show will be the largest yet. Catalogues and entry forms are available
