Waiting

In the diningroom of Johnson-Mathers Nursing Home are Mrs. Mary Rogers, Joe Blount, Landen Stewart, Henry Thompson and Herchel Dampier waiting for the homemade Ice cream, a special treat for everyone these days.

Whitesburg to open own summer drama

This little coal-mining town in the Eastern Kentucky mountains has a life-style, atmosphere and peace like most small communities, but with a heritage and spirit all its own. Now it's going to dramatize its heritage for all the world to see.

It's a heritage of former importance as a railroad town, of Civil War skirmishes fought along the nearby mountain ridges and of pride and love among the people for the rugged natural beauty in which they live.

For the past 19 months, the people of Whitesburg and Letcher county have been acquiring land and money, donated by local citizens, to build a 500-seat amphitheater and produce a drama, "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," to tell their tale.

The drama, which opens this month, carries a special meaning for the community, its citizens tell you, for it is a story written specifically about their valley.

Based on John Fox Jr.'s novel of the same name, the drama tells of a mountain waif named Chad, raised in Kingdom Come, and his experiences in the Civil War when brother fought brother and friend fought friend.

In fact, it was in Whitesburg, about fives miles from the site of the new amphitheater, that Fox wrote his novel—the first in this country to sell over one million copies. His cabin stands there today.

According to local citizens, Fox came to the valley from Paris, Ky. as a young man, with his father and brother to work in the mines.

It was here, they say, that the well-known author first developed his friendship and love for the mountain people. Here also he experienced many of the scenes about which he would later write, such as mountain men and their sons floating logs down the Kentucky River to the Bluegrass.

"You'll still find the same breed of person here today that Fox wrote about 75 years ago," said Frank Majority, a disabled veteran and member of the drama cast, who speaks with authority about the area.

"They're mountain people who have been livin' off the land. . . doing things the same way their forefathers did, like hog-killin', molasses-making and blanket-making, and so on. . . hoping to keep their heritage alive."

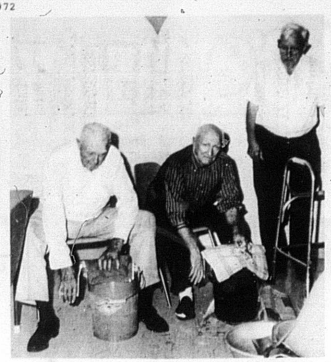
It's just such Whitesburg and Letcher county citizens that audiences will be meeting when they see the drama, Don Amburgey, the show's producer, said. The cast will be made up entirely of local citizens, ages 17 through 55.

Only the script written by Earl Hobson Smith, who also dramatized Fox's "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," has been prepared outside the area.

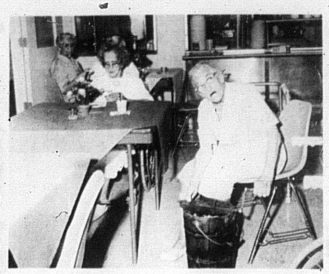
Both the mountain dialect and music used in the drama will date back to Fox's days in the valley.

Despite the handicaps of operating an outdoor drama largely on their own, Whitesburg citizens are tackling the project with the same enthusiasm and determination that, years ago, cleared the land and built a community in the rugged mountains.

Asked how most Whitesburg citizens feel about their undertaking as the first season of the drama approaches, Majority replied, "We know we can do anything here that anyone has done elsewhere.



Cranking



Eating

A special treat for the residents of Johnson-Mathers Nursing was an old, fashioned ice cream party. Here Mrs. Margaret Bradberry, 91, removes top from the last freezer of banana ice cream. Shown already served are Mrs. Mae Berry and Mrs. Annie Clark.

Busy turning the crank for homemade Icecream Friday afternoon at Johnson Mathers Nursing Home are James Honaker and Herman Conyers. Landen Stewart waits patiently for them to get the job done.
