Rediscovering Kingdom Come

by Helen Price Stace

West Liberty—Violators are soot tall along the banks of Kingdom Come Creek. Trees bend gnarled roots like long slender fingers reaching through tall mounds to overhand the stream's crystal clear water.

The road up the Valley of Kingdom Come is rough and narrow like the creek, and sometimes the road becomes the creek and the creek, the road. This once was the route traveled by mountaineers with their ox teams, flocks of sheep and herds of cattle, on the way across Pine Mountain and the Black Mountain to market at the Gap.

John Fox, Jr., a native of Stony Point near Paris, roamed up and down this creek in the late 1800's. He came here to regain his health, but stayed to mine coal, to absorb the epic breath of mountain life and to see deep within the hearts of a proud people.

Later, Fox brought those mountain folk to life for readers of his books far beyond the wilderness of Kingdom Come.

Seeking background on Kentucky's oldest outdoor drama, "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," based on Fox's book of the same name, was excused through to visit the region.

Travelling up the rocky creek in easy today with four-wheel drive, my brother, city manager of Whitesburg, and Sherry Conatser, Letcher County speech therapist, were along on the trip, 9130 Balboa Avenue, L.A., California 90045. 6-22-12tch.

Children's art display MSU

A traveling 150-piece exhibition of children's art is on display at Morehead State University's Claypool-Young Gallery.

Art work produced by students in grades 1 through 9 at Stewart Laboratory School at the State University of Wisconsin at Oshkosh will be shown daily through Aug. 1.

Sponsored by the International Rotary Club, the exhibit recently was circulated throughout Mexico.

Many pieces in the collection have been used as illustrations in "Art in Depth," a textbook on children's art.

Summer gallery hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday, and 1 to 4 p.m. on weekends.
