Farm Bureau awards two distinguished service honors

Mrs. Hugh J. Turner, a Fayette County farm wife, and Julian Walden, well-known tobacco and bluegrass farmer from Woodford county, have been named winners of Kentucky Farm Bureau's 1972 distinguished service award.

Mrs. Turner and Walden were recognized during Kentucky Farm Bureau's 23rd annual convention in session at Lexington's Phoenix Hotel.

Mrs. Turner and Walden were the organization's award for distinguished service to Kentucky agriculture. The two awards, presented annually, are considered the highest honors given by the state's largest farm organization.

Mrs. Turner and her husband, Hugh, operate a 16-acre tobacco and livestock farm in Fayette County, and as a working mother and partner, she has been associated with farming for the past 40 years. The Turner is the parents of two children and has one grandson.

Mrs. Turner has been active in Farm Bureau through most of her adult life. She has served as chairman of women's activities for 15 years at the county level, seven years at the district level, and for three years as state chairman of the Farm Bureau Women's Committee.

Julian Walden, a Midway, Ky., farmer for three decades, has gained national and international prominence for himself in his tobacco operation, he was an early and vocal proponent of mechanization for the burley farmer, and helped pioneer such equipment as the primer, frame wagons and high-speed transplanter.

Bill Walden is best known for his efforts on behalf of bluegrass, the original trademark of Kentucky. He has urged Kentucky farmers to investigate seed and soil production in a valuable crop, and has led a crusade to limit the "Kentucky Bluegrass" trademark label to high-quality seed produced in Kentucky.

He has taken his case to high-ranking state and federal officials, deploring the fact that even bluegrass seed produced overseas may carry the Kentucky designation on its label.

He is a native of Garrard county, the son of a Christian Church minister and a graduate of Centre College. He is married to the former Lily Parrish, and they have four children.

Walden is known in agricultural circles as an outcrop and sowing advocate of Kentucky and its agriculture, and an innovative farm professional constantly searching for new products and practices to boost farm productivity and profits.

He owns and operates the 800-acre Parrish-Walden Farms, where his major products are bluegrass seed and sorghum, burley tobacco and beef. He has also been involved in the production of thoroughbreds.

County road aid

various counties of the Commonwealth meet their responsibilities for local roads. It is supported by an annual appropriation from the General Road Fund.

The appropriation for the fiscal year beginning July 1 is $13 million. This sum is distributed among the 120 counties according to the terms of a formula chosen by the General Assembly in 1964.

The program is selected annually after consultation between the Department of Highways and the Fiscal Court. A formal agreement has been signed by officials acting for the Department and the Courts. It lists the roads to be maintained and the work to be done.

Commissioner Pape said, "To my mind, the County Road Aid Program is one of the most important administered by the Highway Department. For many rural citizens of the Commonwealth, it means that their homes can be served by an adequately maintained all-weather road. I am happy that the Department is able to provide this vital assistance to them and their county governments."
