More schooling

the average person's earning prospects, rise considerably.

Apparently that fact has registered with the young people in the local area. They are staying in school longer. The latest figures show that Nicholas County residents, by the time they reach 25, now have a median of 8.3 years of formal education, which is more than was being required 10 years ago. The median then was 8.4 years.

As detailed by the Department of Commerce, some 23.9 percent of the male population in the local area and 33.9 percent of the female, age 25 or over, are high school graduates.

This is a bigger proportion than was found in many sections of the country. The increase in the amount of schooling being obtained in Nicholas County, compared with 1960, comes to 6.0 percent.

Just how much more this increase is producing at the present time, financially, is indicated by the general findings. They show that the median income being received by a man who has attended college for four years is approximately 48 percent greater than is paid to a high school graduate.

The high school graduate, in turn, has a 27 percent advantage over one who has no more than an elementary school diploma. For those who did not finish elementary school, the wage scale is 36 percent lower, on average. Because elementary and secondary schools in the United States are handling more pupils, necessitating bigger expenses for salaries, supplies and maintenance, their operating costs in the past year reached $7 billion, which was 10 percent greater than ten years ago.

impressive 66-pound, with Gerald Hutton leading with 17. Fryman followed with 13, while Compton had 11 and Jones had 10.

The Jackets had only four assists and Hutton had three of those. Hutton also led in recoveries with five.

Everyone seemed to be concerned over Nicholas County's apparent lack of size, but the teams couldn't have been much more evenly matched in size or experience. Two sophomores, Doug Darbro and Raymond Compton, came off the bench to look very sharp picking up 10 and 11 points respectively.

The Nicholas "B" team scored a decisive victory in its season opener, 53-37 over the Tolleboro "B" team. The little Jackets had a huge 28 advantage in field goals and at one time held a twenty point advantage, before Jones played out the final quarter. Doug Darbro's 23 all scorers with 18, followed by Raymond Compton and Ricky Hicks with eight apiece.

This week the Jacket, travel to Bourbon County (Tuesday) and M.M.I. (Friday).

The Kentucky Historical Events Celebration Commission has adopted an official emblem for the state's 1974 bicentennial celebration, according to Charles J. Hellman, the commission's executive director.

The emblem is in the shape of a shield, approximately six inches in size, with a statue of Daniel Boone in the foreground, flanked by a figure of a Minuteman.

"The statue of Boone was featured because his name is so synonymous with Kentucky pioneers and the opening of the West," Hellman explained. "The Minuteman represents the type of people who responded to the call in the nation's fight for independence."

The emblem emphasizes the combined "Spirit of 1776" theme the commission is using, relating the state celebration to the national bicentennial in 1976. Also on the emblem are the official seals of the state and national celebrations. The emblem has a mated background of red and white, representing the American flag.
