MAGICWORD by JULIE QUART

HOW TO PLAY: Read the list of words. Look at the puzzle. You'll find these words in all directions — horizontally, vertically, diagonally, backwards. Draw a circle around each letter of a word found in the puzzle then strike it off list. Circling it will show a letter has been used but will leave it visible should it also form part of another word. Find the big words first. When letters of all listed words are circled, you'll have the given number of letters left over. They'll spell out your MAGICWORD.

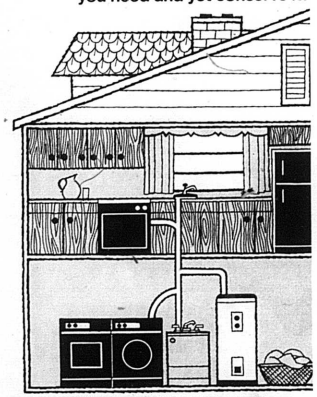
How to use all the hot water you need and yet conserve it:



Save with an electric water heater's efficient installation

I'M WISE TO USE ELECTRICITY — USE IT WISELY

Wait till you have a full load before using your clothes washer. Try to do your dishes in full loads, too. And don't fall asleep in that shower!

Because a fast-recovery electric water heater requires no flue or venting, you can put it near the points of greatest use. Right next to your washer or dishwasher, even under the kitchen counter or in a bathroom closet. Besides eliminating long, heat-wasting pipe runs, you'll have hot water almost as soon as you turn it on!

FABRICS – A BURNING ISSUE

Each year some 3,000 to 5,000 Americans die from burns when fabrics catch fire — clothing, drapes, upholstery, bedding — and another 200,000 suffer severe injury.

As you might expect, the Federal government, as well as consumer and medical groups, is insisting that dangerously flammable fabrics be banned or be treated to make them flame-resistant. The Flammable Fabrics Act, passed in 1953 and amended in 1967, prohibits the manufacture and sale of some materials, and extensive test for flammability are being conducted on others.

The trouble is that making all fabrics flame-retardant is difficult, if not impossible, and what the government finally determines will affect both your safety and your pocketbook.

As of now, rugs and carpets larger than 25 square feet must pass flammability tests; if smaller than 25 square feet they must either be flame-resistant or carry a warning label.

About 25 per cent of home fatalities are the result of bedding fires, and standards of flammability for mattresses and blankets are being developed; the law may extend to sheets and pillow cases.

Most important — children's sleepwear up to and including size 6X must now meet flammability standards or carry a warning label. Nearly all kids' nightclothes are made from knitted cotton, and flameproofing them is giving scientists headaches. Nylon is also difficult to flameproof, and when fire-retardant chemicals are applied to these materials they become stiffer and less durable, and the cost goes up 25 per cent or more. Because of these problems, and the legal risks involved, some makers of children's sleepwear say they may stop production if strict standards are written into the law. Thus many cheap cotton and rayon fabrics will be taken off the market; substitutes will be more expensive.

Until the government makes final decisions, keep these points in mind when shopping. Fiber glass drapes won't burn. Modacrylic fibers burn slowly and self-extinguish when the source of flame is removed. Wool and silk are also slow-burning.

Acrylic, nylon and polyester melt and drip in contact with flame, which can be painful if the drops come in contact with your skin.

HOW UNDERSTITCHING HELPS

A smart-looking short jacket with self-tie at the waist, when added to matching shorts, slacks or pleated skirt, provides a lot of mileage in coordination with sweaters, vests, blouses. If the basic outfit is made of durable denim, you get extra mileage.

Denim's characteristics are strength, resilience and durability. Because the lengthwise yarns are dyed indigo blue before weaving and are then criss-crossed with white, gray or tinted yarns, the cloth provides an interesting striated effect. However, remember to cut all garment pieces in the same direction.

Also, when making a casual outfit, give it all the skill and patience you'd lavish on a day dress or evening wear. Your clothes make an impression at all times, and that extra little detail will provide the self-assurance that says, "I know I look good."

The collar of a jacket, for instance, will benefit from sharp corners and from understitching, that prevents the edge of the collar from rolling.

To eliminate bulk at collar corners, trim the point of the interfacing before attaching it to the collar. After pinning the interfacing to the collar, stitch it one-half inch from the edge. Trim away the interfacing close to the line of stitching. Place the facing over the collar section, right sides together, and stitch on the seam line along the outside curve of the collar only. Leave the straight edges unstitched at this time.

Snip a few triangular-shaped notches out of the curved edge of the collar seam at regularly spaced intervals. This allows the collar fabric to lie smooth, when it is turned.

Spread the collar and facing and press the seam toward the facing. Use the point of the iron in a pressing, not ironing, motion.

Turn the collar over to the outside and stitch close to the seam line through the facing and seam allowances. Now, with right sides together, stitch across the straight ends of the collar. Decrease the length of the stitch approximately one inch from the corner, pivot and stitch one inch along the outside seam of the collar. These small stitches hold the yarns in place when the collar is turned and you use a pointed instrument to push the fabric into place. Be careful not to puncture the fabric by using a sharp object.

When you press the collar, have the collar facing uppermost and draw it down just a little so that it pulls the collar fabric over the curve a bit. This prevents the facing from showing on the outside and provides a dressmaker finish. Turn the collar over and press again with the collar side up.

This technique of understitching is also useful when sewing the front edges of the jacket, as it holds the facing in place instead of letting it curl to the front.

To help you understand the properties of fibers and how they influence fabric, write for the free pamphlet, "Facts About Man-made Fibers," which outlines characteristics, care and use. Send long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Fannie Gleeson, c/o this paper.

Commission seeks new poetry-in-schools director

The Kentucky Arts Commission is taking applications to employ a new director for the Poetry-in-Schools program for the 1973-74 school year.

Malcolm Glass, the current director, will return to his position as associate professor of English and director of writing programs at Austin Peay State University at the end of the spring term.

The Poetry-in-Schools program is sponsored by the National Endowment for the Arts and the Kentucky Arts Commission. It is a pilot project in teaching children to write and enjoy poetry. A publishing poet works in a school for about six weeks as a poet-in-residence, helping the students to develop their creativity, imagination, appreciation of poetry and writing skills.

The poet spends three days each week in the classroom and is free to work on his own poetry the remaining two days of the week. His salary is provided.

Anyone interested in the position should contact the Kentucky Arts Commission, Capital Plaza, Frankfort, Ky. 40601.
