Kentucky Afield

Dept. of Fish and Wildlife

Kentucky sportsmen who pack away their fishing tackle when they get their hunting gear out of storage are missing some of the best fishing of the year, as those dedicated to fall fishing know. There are several advantages to fall fishing. The majority of pleasure boats are off the water after the Labor Day weekend, leaving the lakes practically free of skiers and speedboats. The cool weather not only offers a welcome change from the heat of August, but the weather is also more stable and constant.

the threat of sudden thunderstorms having passed. But the biggest advantage of fall fishing is the results. As the water temperatures begin to drop, black bass seem to go on a heavy feeding spree before winter. As in the spring, they begin to cruise the shallows in search of food, offering some of the best action of the year for surfcasters and casters. However, bass will also hit shallow runners and even bottom-bouncing lures. The excitement and fast action of jump fishing for black bass is often at its best also take fair strings of white bass while fishing for black bass. For the live bait fisherman, fall offers the promise of good catches of white bass and crappie. The most productive method here is night fishing with live minnows dangled under a lantern or other light. Sauger fishermen in Western Kentucky look forward to the possibility of limit catches of this fine game and table fish from the Tennessee River below Kentucky Lake. Both trolling and fishing live bait produce good strings of sauger every fall. Muskie fishermen also anticipate the cooler weather in late autumn. As the leaves begin to fall, muskie become active. Connecting with one of these monsters could well be the highlight of anyone's fishing season. Fall is the time for some very good trout fishing. Many streams which are too warm to support trout during the summer are stocked by the Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources in September and October, as are the tributaries below the major lakes. Here, the fishing conditions are often excellent because of the low flow and trout can be readily caught by either artificial or natural baits. If you haven't tried fall fishing, why not schedule several trips to your favorite lake between hunting expeditions. If you're already a confirmed fall fisherman, it's time to start getting ready - it's just around the corner.
