Outdoor Lore

By Nevyle Shackelford - University of Kentucky College of Agriculture

As a symbol of love and goodwill, mistletoe comes into its own at Christmas. At this period, or season of the year, young maidens caught standing under it can be kissed without ceremony or prior permission and, according to tradition, without giving offense.

Many more myths surround this parasite plant that infests trees throughout Kentucky and the world. It was the "golden bough" of legend that protected Aeneas, the Grecian hero of Troy, on his trip to the underworld and the plant ancient Romans believed would assure safe passage across River Styx.

It was the source of the arrow which slayed Balder, sun god of Norse mythology, who fortunately was restored to life through the intercession of other gods. Custody of the mistletoe plant was entrusted to Freya, goddess of love, who ordained that beneficent anyone passing under it should receive a kiss in token of love, not vengeance. As long as mistletoe hangs high, holds the legend, it can never be used as a power for evil.

Throughout the Middle Ages, men believed mistletoe possessed all manner of magical powers. Medicine was brewed from it in France and Sweden to cure leprosy as a cure for alopecia. As late as 1793 in England, it was believed able to cure warts and other ailments. As the stories go, in some German villages this Yuletide green is still called "gut boy" or "cheat all." In Brittany, its berries are still crushed to produce oil for treating fever.

The superstitious awe of mistletoe inspired over the ages undoubtedly stems

In Spain, song and dance dominate all the Yuletide celebrations, which begin on Christmas Eve, called "Noche Buena" or "The Good Night." The birth of the Christ Child is heralded in a gay and festive manner by crowds of young people singing and dancing in the streets to the accompaniment of lapshourines, guitars, guitar rattles and castanets. During midnight church services, lapshourines and guitars blend with the organ music and the spirited voices of the congregation.

Christmas Day is devoted to family reunions. There is much feasting on such delicacies as almond soup, truffled turkey with chestnuts or roast turkey with apples and raisin stuffing. The traditional Christmas sweet is turkey, a noisak of almond candy.

After dinner, the family gathers around the Nativity, or Nativity scene, which has been lighted with candles, to sing lively Spanish carols, most of which date back hundreds of years. Spirits are further whipped up by the noise of the "panderetas" (tambourine) and the "zambombas," a drumlike instrument with a reed stuck through the skin which, after being moistened, is moved up and down, producing a deep monotonous sound. The children join in enthusiastically, singing and dancing around the
