Consumer's Panel Is First For State

State Attorney General Ed W. Hancock has said that to his knowledge Kentucky is the first state to create a Consumers' Arbitration Panel under the Attorney General's office.

According to Hancock, when a consumer complaint is registered with the Division of Consumer Protection and reaches a point where it cannot be settled through mediation by his office, the Division contacts both the businessman and the consumer and suggests voluntary arbitration. If both parties sign an arbitration agreement, a panel is appointed to conduct the arbitration.

The panel consists of one businessman, one member of the general public and one member of the Consumers' Advisory Council. Hancock added that prior to the actual arbitration meeting, both parties must sign agreements to abide by the decision of the arbitration panel. The decision, when reached by the panel, will be given to the parties involved, within 30 days.

Hancock explained that some matters, those which may involve litigation by the Division of Consumer Protection under provisions of the Consumer Fraud Law, will not be heard by the Arbitration Panel.
