

Thanksgiving 1973

"Rest and be thankful." How far modern man has strayed from that wise Old Testament counsel! Today we are so busy with our daily affairs, complaining of traffic, the long lines at the food stores, the like—never bothering to count our blessings. This Thanksgiving Day, worth twice as much as a rest day in reflection upon the true meaning of life in America and, in fact, content to a real appreciation of our good fortune.

Policies of scarcity

A fanciful press release purporting to visualize events in the year 2001 and (dubbed) Washington, D.C. describes food limits on home construction because of "our continuing national wood crisis." The release also tells of how, on Jan. 1, 2001, the President of the United States, because of wood and paper shortages, imposed restrictions on the publishing industry and on how "Three of the remaining five national newspapers may be forced to suspend operation due to the forest products shortage..."

Time to be tough

There are some things money—dollars—cannot buy. As a number of authorities have warned for some time, this may prove to be the case with foreign imports of petroleum. These authorities have said all along that there is no substitute for intelligent and aggressive development of U.S. oil and gas resources. They have warned against the policy of relying on the Arab-OPEC pipeline, offshore exploration and other policies and measures that have discouraged oil industry incentives. Now the chickens are coming home to roost.

In eating, my son is another Diamond (In-The-Rough)

Watching our son inhale a hot dinner fork, I'm not enough but, for the time being, I'm satisfied. I offered to congratulate him on his speed which, in track world, is the two-minute mark. "M-m-m-m!" he said. This could mean anything or nothing. I said, "At least say 'dada' with his mouth full. His substitution on communications is how you would describe a 'cum laude' caliber. 'Don't talk with your mouth full!' his mother reminded him. 'I can't have much time for him to say anything around the house.' He must be a prodigy. G. concept of modern timber company forest management that encourages the wise utilization of mature forests for greater output of essential wood products. They labor under the delusion that a tree is an unchanging symbol of nature that will stand in perpetuity. This misconception, if carried through into the release, never materialize common sense and rapidly changing forest practices of tomorrow. As forests are harvested and new, faster-growing trees take their place on timberlands of tomorrow, these timberlands are available to the industry for use every year—240 can be a period of wood products abundance rather than scarcity. A deciding factor will be public understanding of the basic cause of our forest loss is due in the years ahead.

Ever so often we seem to accumulate what looks like a mountain of old newspapers. For awhile this organization or that would ask us to save the old papers for recycling and they would collect them.

blackmail apparently has been of little concern to those who have sought to block the efforts of the petroleum industry to meet rising petroleum needs. As columnist Joseph Alsop concludes, "This prospective shortage has been aggravated by the illusion that cheap foreign oil imports could be used to compensate for the crippling restrictions imposed on domestic production. The implicit threat to national security in such a situation and the danger of energy-starvation loomed as a victim of international
