SUCCESS IN MARRIAGE

DEAR PROFESSOR WILLIAMS: My wife and I both work. She insists on each paying certain bills. I feel the better way is to put all the money together and pay expenses out of the combined income. What do you think? -W.O., New Taiwan, Tenn. PROFESSOR WILLIAMS: Personally, I think one of the easiest and least confusing ways to handle money when both spouses work is to have a joint checking and/or savings account. Both paychecks should be deposited in the same account. On this basis, both know for what the money is spent as well as the total income each payday. It doesn't matter which one pays the bills as long as both agree on the arrangement. The amount left over should be spent, invested, or put into a savings account with the mutual agreement of both. This method of handling the family income keeps distrust out of finances at a minimum. Certainly, each spouse should have a little spending money for lunch, coffee, and other miscellaneous items but it should be minimal. If all money is accounted for, there will be less distrust and fewer arguments, at least over finance. Also, the couple will be surprised how much can be saved.

ARE SEX AND LOVE SEPARATE? I am a senior in high school and have dated this guy for over a year. He says that sex and love are separate. My social science teacher says they are together. The next day I read in the paper that sex and love are separate. PROFESSOR WILLIAMS: Sex is a biological drive and has no conscience. It is controlled by what a person believes, or his philosophy of life. In no other way, sex is a function of the mind. Love, on the other hand, is a much broader area of emotion, attitudes, ideas, and ideals which include sex as only one aspect. Love encompasses much more than just sex. Love is characterized by putting another's well-being above oneself; by sacrificing to defend and enhance the other's welfare and happiness. In other words, love is love-oriented; sex is self-centered. Love involves what you can give others; sex involves what you can get from others. Love directs and guides the proper use of sex. In western society, the mores dictate that the proper place for sex is in marriage. When a guy backs a girl into a corner by saying that if she really loved him, she would give it to him, she should consider seriously whether he really loves her and if so, why would he seek his own selfish gratification, not considering her welfare, her reputation and her feelings. True love doesn't demand; it gives. Sex, on the other hand, demands and it takes. Emphasis on sex without love is characterized by selfishness, lack of consideration and self-centeredness. Sex is only a part of life, not to be considered separately. It's true, many engage in sex for the purpose of sheer sexual gratification with no thought of love. However, for sex to be meaningful and emotionally gratifying, it should be within the greater context of love and marriage.
