Warbles unsightly but squirrels okay

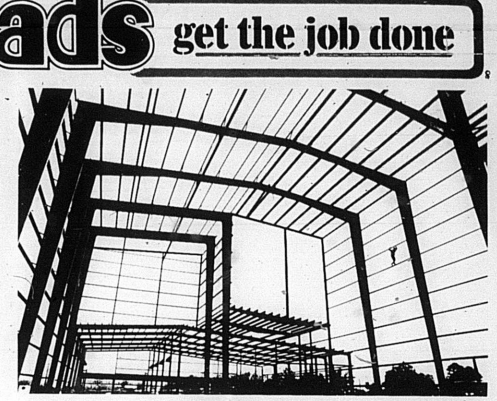

Some squirrel hunters had quite an unpleasant surprise when they began cleaning their squirrels this season. The reason—warbles, the large larval grub of the bot fly, were embedded in the skin of the animals. While the warbles are unsightly, they cause no damage to the squirrel's flesh and in no way detract from its edibility, according to Harold Barber, chief forest game biologist with the Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources.

Warble infestation is never a serious problem in Kentucky, Barber points out because it is not a pest of the squirrel's year-long period known as pupation, the grub changes into the bot fly. When it finally emerges the adult bot fly will spend its brief life feeding out sites for its young. Out of the thousands of warbles deposited only a few will complete the life cycle.

Senator Deed Hueston

REPORTS TO THE PEOPLE OF KENTUCKY

TITLE I SCHOOL FUNDS

During the last several weeks we have been successful in the Congress in forming the Title I program, which provides for compensatory education.

When the education appropriation bill reached the Senate it contained a formula that would have cut Kentucky's share of these funds from $20 million. However, Senators from states like Kentucky, working with Appropriations Committee Chairman John McClellan, managed to rework the formula to provide more money for our state.

We still have to work out a compromise bill with the House of Representatives regarding long-range funding of the Title I program, but I am hopeful that the new formula which we devised will prevail. The new formula will provide the first of several hundred Kentucky school teachers and the elimination of a program serving thousands of our school children.

A week in my office contacted officials of more than 100 Kentucky communities in some 80 counties which are eligible for additional revenue sharing funds during this quarter. I have urged these communities to make their application as soon as possible because there is an October deadline. These are funds which Kentucky citizens are entitled to and I believe we should take full advantage of them.

I am a strong believer in the concept of general revenue sharing in which the federal government shares a portion of its revenue with local communities, thus assuring more local control of government spending. The government has allocated $2.3 billion in revenue sharing since the program was implemented last year and studies have shown that most of the money is being well spent at the local level.

A recent study by the U.S. Office of Revenue Sharing in the Treasury Department shows that revenue sharing expenditures since January of this year were mainly spent for local services. The top three expenditures were police and public safety, 23.3 percent; education, 22 percent; and transportation, 13.1 percent. This indicates that local governments are making use of revenue sharing funds—which after all, is taxpayer's money from Kentucky and throughout the nation.

It was dismayed to hear that the Treasury Department "overpaid" some communities and is now asking that some of the revenue sharing funds be returned. This is a very serious matter because it means that the government is not getting its money and the necessity of paying some of it back causes quite a hardship. I do not believe that the Treasury Department should be allowed to do this. I will be spending my best efforts to get the Treasury Department, which has ample access to computers, should be able to figure out the first place—and I will tell the department in a letter of protest.
