Dear Santa,

Since I am only eight months old, naturally someone else is writing this for me. Everyone says I am a very good little boy. It must be because my mamma and daddy are so nice. I don't know very much about this Christmas celebrating but will certainly learn as time goes on.

For now I seem to have everything to make a little boy happy so remember my parents, grandparents, relatives and the children who want certain things. I'll be waiting for you next year!

Love,
Bill Leonard

Somebody must have a sick mind, who else near the Christmas season? This window at Southern States Carlisle Cooperative seemingly caught the brunt of about presumably fired by someone with an air gun. Damages to six or more business establishments along Main Street will easily pass the thousand dollar mark. Advertisers assume that the person firing the gun Friday night was in a car. In addition to numerous plate glass windows, several vehicles had windshields and windows damaged—Mercury photo.

Fertilizer dealers need a number

Kentucky fertilizer dealers need more than just fertilizer and pesticides to operate. Now, they need a number too. According to Fred Waters, chief of the pesticides section of the division of special programs of the Kentucky Department for Natural Resources and Environmental Protection, fertilizer dealers should act immediately to comply with a federal pesticides law. Any dealer who mixes fertilizers with pesticides and sells the mixture must secure an establishment number from the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency. However, if the dealer also applies the fertilizer-pesticide mixture for a customer, he is considered a commercial applicator and does not need an establishment number. Instead, he must obtain a commercial applicator's license from the state environmental protection agency. That license should be secured by Jan. 1, 1975.

To comply with the federal law, fertilizer dealers also must develop a label for each of the fertilizer-pesticide mixtures they sell. That label must be submitted to the state for approval by Feb. 1, 1975. The state's pesticide section met recently with industry people, who agreed to cooperate in developing labels.

"Fertilizer dealers with questions about whether or not their mixtures should be registered," said Waters,

"should contact the state pesticides office." Dealers who already are mixing pesticides with fertilizers and who want to register the compounds also should write the pesticides section. For information on registration and on study materials for the commercial applicator's test, write Pesticides Section, Division of Special Programs, Department for Natural Resources and Environmental Protection, Capital Plaza Tower, Third Floor, Frankfort, Ky. 40601, or call (502) 564-7774. To obtain a U.S. establishment number, fertilizer dealers should write Clarence Durkin, U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, Pesticides Branch, 1421 Peachtree Street N.E., Atlanta, Ga. 30309, or call (404) 563-3222.
