Rep. Perkins starts hearings on vocational education funds

Rep. Carl D. Perkins has started holding Congressional hearings on vocational education, with a view toward increasing federal support of this vital program. The Kentucky Congressman said that a substantial increase in federal support is needed to train young people, and give them employable skills. He is the author of the existing vocational education legislation, starting in 1963, and when he opened the current series of hearings, Rep. Perkins said, "youth unemployment is high, and waiting lists are long to get into vocational schools. We must move ahead and expand this program, so that young people who are not going to college can prepare for careers which will help them earn a good living." Rep. Perkins also said that special help must be given to rural areas and Appalachia, which are job short. He said expanding vocational education will be an added attraction, helping bring more industry into Appalachia and rural counties.
