

Lawrence Moore named regional EEO representative

Lawrence E. Moore has been selected as Regional Equal Employment Opportunity Representative in the Atlanta Regional Office of the U.S. Civil Service Commission. Moore will replace Frank E. Matthews, who had served from 1970 until September 1974, when he was reassigned to the Regional Training Center.

Moore began his Federal career in 1964 with the Small Business Administration serving in various clerical positions until 1969 when he was promoted to Position Classification Specialist. In 1971, he was transferred to the Personnel Management and Evaluation Division in the Atlanta Regional Office of the U.S. Civil Service Commission as Personnel Management Specialist, which position he has occupied to the present time.

Moore attended Morehouse College and is a graduate of Georgia State University. He received his Master's Degree in Urban Administration from Georgia State University and is presently pursuing a Ph.D. Degree in Political Science at the same institution. He served in the U.S. Air Force from 1962 to 1966. He will assume his new duties on Nov. 3, 1974.

Sensing the news

TAX AND SPEND—AGAIN

President Ford really stumbled in proposing a 4 per cent surcharge on corporations and families with gross incomes of $12,000 or more. If enacted into law, the surcharge would put more billions into the hands of the federal bureaucracy.

The way to fight inflation is to deprive the federal bureaucracy of money, not give them additional funds. Much of the money raised by the surcharge would be spent on the creation of a Commission on Economic Corps, a new make-work agency for the unemployed. This is the New Deal WPA program under another name. Let's not go back to vintage New Deal.

It is dismaying that the President, who has spoken eloquently about the need to fight inflation, doesn't realize that the fight can't be won by creating another federal agency or by placing a new tax burden on employers and other productive citizens.

As for creating public service jobs to counter a recession, that simply places a heavier burden on those who are employed or who provide jobs in a community. We have been this route before in this country—and it hasn't led anywhere. We simply must not go back to New Deal, pump-priming economics with its make-work programs and soak-the-productive philosophy.

Now is the time to cut taxes on business and to slash federal budgets of federal agencies. As U.S. Rep. Floyd D. Spence (R., S.C.), said, "the people need a reduction in taxes." The Daily Workforce in Oklahoma City made a great deal of sense the other day when it noted editorially that "Taking the money out of citizens' pockets and into the Treasury does not take it out of circulation. It simply was always a wartime rationale for higher taxes. The federal government today puts it back into circulation faster than it can take it away from the citizens."

By Anthony Harrigan EXECUTIVE VICE PRESIDENT United States Industrial Council

They, too, "vest" in funding unproductive programs and in planning prestige projects for which there is no justification in the midst of a grave national economic crisis.

The important question is: do the voters recognize sound economic advice when they hear it? For a generation or more, Americans have been told that government can tax and spend its way out of any difficulty.

The Executive and Legislative Branches must consider any and all super-regulation of industry and price controls on natural gas, for instance, which restricts development of this needed energy resource.

But all that requires vision and fortitude. And accurate understanding of our national situation is lacking in the White House and the Congress, as is determination to fight the union bosses and oppose the demands of career wildcatism.

That's why the country gets another proposal to squeeze the middle class and put another penny on business. Mr. Ford shouldn't bear all the blame, of course. Congress has been unwilling to abolish the foreign aid program, which is utterly inexcusable in the light of the country's financial plight. Moreover, the economic genius of Sen. Mike Mansfield of Montana, the Majority Leader, runs to restoring wage and price controls, which haven't worked at any time in the past.

Governor's conservation awards banquet Nov. 9 in Louisville

Louisville—The 19th annual Governor's Conservation Achievement Awards Banquet will be held Saturday, Nov. 9, at the Executive Inn in Louisville.

The awards program, sponsored by the League of Kentucky Sportsmen and the Kentucky Wildlife Federation, is designed to encourage and recognize the efforts of individuals and organizations in the field of conservation.

Gov. Wendell H. Ford will deliver the principal address at the banquet and will present plaques to the winners in 10 different categories, according to League President Roy Haddock of Lexington.

Banquet tickets will be $750 each. A free hospitality hour will begin at 4:30 p.m. and the banquet will follow at 7:30 p.m.

Reservations for the banquet must be made by Nov. 5 by letter to Clyde Hubbard, Awards Chairman, 4506 Talbot Avenue, Louisville, Ky. 40208. Tickets will be picked up at the door.

The intent of the awards program is to further the proper utilization and management of the natural resources of Kentucky—soils, waters, minerals, forests, fisheries and wildlife.

Soil testing denotes fertilization plan

TEST YOUR SOIL. You won't get the most out of your fertilizer dollar unless you have a definite fertilization plan which is based on soil testing. Lloyd Murdock, Extension soils specialist at the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture, says now is a good time to put your fertilizer program on a planned basis.

Murdock notes that years ago, most farmers simply applied a certain amount of fertilizer per acre. Unfortunately, too many farmers are still using this approach. The UK specialist says soil testing has improved a lot over the years and is a very reliable tool on which to base a fertilizer plan.

You should set a goal for your program, says Murdock. That goal should be to increase soil test levels of phosphorus and potassium to the high-medium to high range. Once you have reached the level you are aiming for, you will need to apply only enough fertilizer to maintain the soil at that level. Thus, a plan based on soil testing will keep you from buying fertilizer you don't really need. Murdock recommends a visit with your local County Extension Agent for information on soil testing.
