No More Canning Jars or Lids? Then Freeze Extra Tomatoes

If you run out of jars and lids before you run out of tomatoes, freeze them. Frozen juice is excellent. Stewed tomatoes make a good-enough frozen product, useful in sauces, soups and casseroles the rest of the year. They won't have that same fine flavor as your canned tomatoes, but freezing certainly beats letting them go to waste.

Here's how to prepare the stewed tomatoes. Wash, trim, and peel firm ripe tomatoes. Cut in quarters and simmer in their own juice until tender—about 10 minutes.

Place pints containing tomatoes in cold water until they cool down. Pack into containers, leaving ½ inch head space for pints and one inch for quarts. Seal and freeze.

To freeze juice, follow the directions for stewed tomatoes, but don't peel them. Simmer tomatoes in their own juice about five minutes. Press through a sieve or food mill. Cool the same way you did the stewed tomatoes. Pack into containers, leaving 1½ inch head space. Seal and freeze.

If you like, add one teaspoon salt to each quart of juice or tomatoes before freezing.

How to Prevent Botulism Poisoning from Home-Canned Foods

Each canning season, the botulism bogeyman hovers somewhere along the edges of our consciousness. And he's scarey.

Regular spoilage in our home-canned foods we can handle—the bulging lid, the faulty seal, the off-odor, the off-flavor, or mold. We throw the food away where pets and people can't get to it, we scrub and sterilize the jar, and we promise ourselves to be more careful in our food preservation practices next year.

But botulism is something else. You can't see it, you can't smell it, you can't taste it. You can't tell it's there without some scientific apparatus to help. But it can kill you just the same.

So what you do is boil all home-canned vegetables at least 10 minutes before you eat them, and before you even taste them. If you want to use home-canned beans in a cold three-bean salad, for instance, boil them 10 minutes first and then cool them down for the salad.

Safety from both botulism and spoilage in your home-processed foods depends on following good canning directions to the letter and using good-quality, fresh garden produce.

Approved home canning methods raise the temperatures of fruits and vegetables to high-enough levels long enough to keep them safe from botulism and free of spoilage. Proper processing techniques include pressure canning those low-acid vegetables, which means everything except tomatoes and pickled vegetables. (And just adding some vinegar won't do it—they have to be really pickled.)

Botulism is a type of food poisoning, a toxin produced by clostridium botulinum spores. These spores are found in soil, air, and on raw foods. The spores themselves are not dangerous, they won't grow or produce deadly botulism toxin in the presence of air. A high-acid content in food also discourages their growth. But if they are not destroyed by heat, they can grow without air in sealed jars of low-acid foods.

Since lots of first-timers are canning this season, and since it's part of the human condition to make a mistake now and then, be sure: Boil your own home-canned low-acid vegetables at least 10 minutes before serving. And if you're eating at the home of friends, be sure they know the score, too, on preventing the possibility of botulism poisoning for their home-canned foods.

Doesn't the extra boiling time hurt the nutritional value of those vegetables? It can cut down on such nutrients as vitamin C, but the safety factor overrules any loss in food value.

If you need more information on home canning and food safety, call the Extension Office for free food-preservation publications.

School employees will benefit from insurance

by Jennifer Kaye Robinson

"All local school district employees will be eligible for another fringe benefit," said Dr Lyman V. Ginger, state superintendent of public instruction.

At the beginning of the school year employes can purchase life insurance coverage for their spouses and unmarried dependent children at a cost of only $24 per year.

The policy would provide $2,000 of term life insurance on the dependent spouse (husband or wife) and $1,000 of term life insurance on each child age six months to 18 years.

Dr. Ginger urged each employe to ascertain whether this coverage is a bargain for his family. He said a covered employe with a large family would certainly benefit from this coverage, and that it "guarantees some security for all employes in the school systems—elementary, secondary and vocational—in the Commonwealth of Kentucky."

The insurance is offered by the Kentucky Central Life Insurance Company which also provides group life insurance to all other state employes.

Civil Defense is replaced

by Marva Gay

Civil Defense—protector of the people against enemy attack and sabotage, leader of air-raid drills and designator of fall-out shelters—has been replaced by the Division of Disaster and Emergency Services in the state Department of Military Affairs.

The bill which created the new agency also requires each county, city and metropolitan government to establish a local organization for disaster and emergency response. It authorizes emergency powers for public officials and permits mutual aid during emergencies. An emergency preparedness council composed of local civil preparedness coordinators has been formed to insure pre-planning and cooperation in response efforts during disasters and emergencies.

Clinics set for drinking drivers

Kentucky's Alcohol Driver Education (ADE) program, which is aimed at the problem drinker who drives, will begin in October.

Fourteen instructors have completed a workshop focused on curriculum to be used in the program. The instructors are now qualified to conduct Alcohol Driver Education clinics at the 16 locations in the state.

The clinics are being instituted as a result of the passage of House Bill 190 by the 1974 General Assembly and are expected to bring about an increase in drunken driving convictions by local traffic judges.

Prior to passage of House Bill 190, Kentucky law had required that the Department of Transportation revoke for six months the license of any driver convicted of driving while under the influence of intoxicants.

Under the amended law, the traffic judge may recommend that a person convicted of driving under the influence of intoxicants be allowed to keep his license.

The offender must not have a previous drunken driving conviction and must attend and successfully complete the Alcohol Driver Education Clinic to which he is assigned.

MSU offering credit via KET

Morehead State University is offering credit for three courses this fall on Kentucky Educational Television (KET).

Psychology 154, Life-Oriented General Psychology, is open to high school juniors and seniors. Presented on KET under the name of "As Man Behaves," the course begins Tuesday, Sept. 10. Lessons are telecast at 7 a.m. and 6:30 p.m. (CDT) each Tuesday and Thursday. Tuition is $54 for the course which carries three semester hours of credit.

Two courses in education; each worth three semester hours, are directed at Kentucky high school teachers.

"Diagnostic and Prescriptive Reading Instruction," offered for credit at MSU as Education 676, Independent Study, begins Monday, Sept. 23. Lessons are shown at 6 p.m. each Monday and Wednesday.

"Developing Success Strategies," also offered under Education 676, starts the same day, Sept. 23. Lessons are telecast at 7:30 p.m. each Tuesday and repeated at the same hour on Thursdays.

Tuition for each education course is $54 for undergraduate credit and $81 for graduate students.

Additional information and enrollment materials are available from Dr. Harry Mayhew, Assistant Dean of Undergraduate Programs, MSU, Morehead, Ky. 40351.

SENSING THE NEWS

by Anthony Harrigan

FEDERALIZED MEDICINE

While President Gerald Ford is off to a good start as the nation's chief executive, trying to balance the budget and fight inflation, he stumbled in his maiden speech in recommending enactment of a federal health bill.

President Ford cannot fight inflation and have a federal health bill at the same time. Earlier this year, Sen. Edward Kennedy and Chairman Wilbur Mills of the House Ways and Means Committee proposed a health bill which they said would cost $8 million a year—to start.

Obviously, this kind of expenditure can't be authorized if the nation is to deal effectively with runaway inflation. The Daily Oklahoman, in a sage and witty comment on the President's proposal, observed that "Pushing for enactment of a costly new social program at this critical juncture would produce another Edsel instead of Ford's better idea."

Excessive government spending is the chief cause of inflation in the United States today. However, not only is it unwise to spend so much money, but the idea of throwing federal money at problems is profoundly mistaken. Informed citizens are convinced that the government would be making a terrible error if it pushed new federal health schemes of any kind.

Llewellyn H. Rockwell Jr., writing in the medical journal Private Practice, comments that the various federal health proposals "all admit, tacitly at least, the existence of a health care crisis requiring a federal solution."

Mr. Rockwell argues that "no serious observer of the American medical care system is saying that a crisis exists. Every public opinion survey taken, shows that the overwhelming majority of Americans are satisfied with their medical care."

"Thanks to the media blitz these same people also believe that everyone else is dissatisfied with his medical care."

Mr. Rockwell notes that the congressional debate is often narrowed to what kind of national health insurance we should have, thus smothering the real issue—should we have nationalized medicine at all?

Given the known quantities of the bureaucratic mind, he says, "can anyone believe that indirect subsidies for medical care costs in the form of tax credits, would not also lead, inevitably, to federal control of the private practice of medicine?"

Mr. Rockwell further notes that "if the experience of other nations can be trusted, everyone's medical costs would skyrocket under national health insurance."

These views deserve a respectful hearing from the American people. The private delivery of medical care has given this nation the finest medical services in the world. The public also knows that the best hospitals are private hospitals where doctors, not bureaucrats, make the decisions about health care.

Millions of Americans have experienced care under military and VA systems. While those authorities try hard, the individual patient often is engulfed in redtape.

Finally, the U.S. public should bear in mind that federal subsidies have failed in every area. Subsidized agriculture has left this nation with multi-billion dollar headaches. Subsidized medicine undoubtedly would produce even bigger headaches, plus real personal inconvenience and suffering. Now is the time, therefore, for the American people to say "no" to all federal health care proposals.
