LOOKS AT Agriculture

Commissioner of Agriculture

The Kentucky Farm-City Council is interested in finding Kentuckians who have a special recipe which uses beef as a main ingredient.

The Council, in cooperation with the Kentucky Beef Cattle Association, is sponsoring the recipe contest as a part of this year's farm-city activities in Kentucky. It will be recalled that last year a pork recipe contest was conducted.

Kentuckians who have a special way of preparing a beef roast, steak, casserole or some other beef dish using beef, should plan to enter the contest. By entering, they can help to promote beef and at the same time, compete for district and state prizes.

The individual submitting the recipe judged to be the best will receive a grand prize at the annual Farm-City Week luncheon in November, which will be held at the Governor's Mansion in Frankfort. Each district winner will receive a prize worth approximately $10.00. The Kentucky Beef Cattle Association will provide copies of the winning recipe to each person who enters the contest, regardless of whether or not they are a district or state winner.

The contest was officially opened on Aug. 21, and will run until midnight on Saturday, Oct. 20. All entries must be postmarked between these two dates to be eligible for the contest.

Any individual—male or female—youth or adult, can enter the contest. The recipe they enter must be for a beef dish, and must, therefore, contain beef as one of the ingredients. Only one recipe per person will be considered for the contest.

Entries are to be mailed to the Farm-City Council Beef Contest, P.O. Box 10, Bowling Green, Ky. 42301. The entry must list the name of the individual submitting the recipe, along with the contestant's full address and the county in which he or she resides.

If a person desires additional information about the recipe contest, they can contact their local Farm-City chairman. If they do not know the name of their local chairman or a member of the local committee, they can contact William Paxon, Kentucky Department of Agriculture, Capital Plaza Tower, Frankfort, Ky. 40601.

Prizes for full-time coverage for Ready Reservists under the Servicemen's Group Life Insurance (SGLI) are $1.40 monthly for $20,000 coverage, $2.35 for $15,000, $1.70 for $10,000 and 50 cents for $5,000.

Premiums for Reservists under part-time SGLI coverage is $2 per year for $20,000 coverage.

The Insurance Act defines Ready Reservists as those assigned to units or positions in which they are required to perform active duty, or active duty for training. In addition, they must be scheduled for at least 15 periods of inactive training each year that is considered for retirement purposes.

As in the active military service, premiums are collected by the branch of service in which the Reservist performs duty.

Debate still rages over mysterious 'Moon Nuggets'

Some superstitious people once believed that witches could call down a vapor from the moon for use in their incantations.

Something far more solid than Hecate's "vaporous drop" may indeed have reached earth from the moon.

Many scientists believe that tektites—small bits of black or green glassy material—scattered to earth about a million years ago when a huge meteorite struck the moon, forming the crater Tycho.

The friction of the impact and of their falling through the atmosphere heated and shaped the fragments that reacted with earth.

Tektites usually weigh from a fraction of an ounce to a pound. They sometimes appear in symmetric shapes such as spheres, teardrops, dumbbells, and disks.

The suggests of moon matter have been found in Southeast Asia, Australia, the Ivory Coast, Czechoslovakia, and the United States. Some of the rocks have been found on the ocean floor, the National Geographic Society says.

Cave men supposedly tipped their weapons with tektites, and Australian aborigines used them for slingshot ammunition.

Dr. Dean Chapman, chief of the Terrestrial and Gas Dynamics Division at Ames Research Center, near San Francisco, believe the tektites found in Australia probably were molten on their way through earth's atmosphere about 700,000 years ago.

"We know how fast they were traveling by the way they have melted," says Dr. Chapman. "And by their distribution on earth we can calculate their trajectories."

"All this points squarely toward the southern part of the moon for their origin, and Tycho fits exactly. We believe it is a relatively young crater, about the same age as the Australian tektites, because its rays have not yet eroded away."

Many Dupite Theory
Not all scientists agree that tektites originated on the moon. Some suggest that they were gouged from the earth by meteors. Others think they are melted fragments of the earth's crust that were catapulted into orbit by a meteoritic impact and have since returned to earth.

One investigator suggested that a comet head collided with the earth, exploding with the energy of a half-million hydrogen bombs. Bits of melted earth materials—tektites—would have been scattered over large areas by the impact.

Scientists are constantly on the prowl for solid chunks of "moon stuff." An investigator who went to the Middle West a few years ago asked farmers to keep an eye out for tektites while plowing their fields.

"Know what exactly this is you are looking for young man?" asked an old farmer.

The scientist explained, "We're looking for moon rocks—that's what you might call it."

"Without blinking an eye, the farmer replied, "Well, fella, have you looked in your head?"
