Let that be a lesson to us

When we were little and did something wrong an adult would moralize our punishment with the comment "let that be a lesson to you." And it usually was.

The lesson that could do well to be taken by that old-fashioned adult is the lesson that we are now learning. There are another 500 million people on earth in just five years. Today's school children are middle-aged—30 years from now—the world's population will be 4.7 billion from under 1 billion to 6.7 billion.

Somebody's going to have to feed all these people. There is already fear of a domestic oil shortage that could make us dangerously dependent on foreign producers. The oil crisis is the suffering we are all going through. It is more serious about of energy than we are. For a number of years, world food production was more than keeping up with population growth. But in the last several years per capita food production has dropped back to level of 13 years ago. Less than five percent of the American population is left on farms and the production capacity for the world's food is dropping. An example of how rapidly our resources are shrinking. In 1959, there were almost two million families milking cows. Now there are only 300,000. It is estimated that the third of those who quit milking in the next five years.

Many economists are concerned that we may be on the edge of a permanent domestic milk shortage that could make us dangerously dependent on foreign producers. The oil crisis is the suffering we are all going through. It is more serious about of energy than we are. For a number of years, world food production was more than keeping up with population growth. Gosh, I hope we haven't used up all our allotment of sunny days, with the annual summer meeting of Kentucky Press Association at Kentucky Dam Village this weekend, the annual awarding of plasters and certificates, and all the out-of-does entertainment planned. To be confined to quarters, as to speak, would be too much to bear. Besides, most of the Mercury crew will be here, except for those who held the fort or those who on vacation.

Eilber or Ar
Eilber publishers trust one another or they are trustworthy—I sure hope so or I'm the prime culprit of the day, week or year have you.

This tale began several days ago when I saw an advertisement in a printing advertisement for sale agent. The item advertised was just what I'd been looking for for several years. I always thought new machines just a little beyond my reach, anyway (the item advertised said).

*Used electric Royal stencil type for use with Elliott Addressing Machine. Excellent condition. Used 3 years.

Well, by writing the company that publishes the sales agent we were able to procure the address and phone number of the publishers that had the stencil type for sale. After talking to them and after assured the machine was as advertised, I sent check, and air mail waiting, and having second thoughts, except for those who held the fort or those who on vacation.

FRANKFORT—Although the primary election is two weeks gone by, we still don't know who was elected commissioner of agriculture and what the new media has taken pride in the efficient reporting of the election returns, this year's report leaves a lot to be desired. It was the worst job in recent memory and we will just have to take the blame for it.

A few years ago the two news wire services, newspaper, and other media formed the Kentucky Election Service. A media representative in each county reports the returns of that county and reports them to Louisville where the results are put into a computer.

The results from some voting machines in Jefferson county hadn't been established last Thursday. It seems there was a mechanical problem.

Some incorrect figures were received from some other counties. There were several typographical errors transmitted to the wires to the news media, and newspapers printed the wrong figures.

While we're awaiting results in some close races, we have another election to look forward to in November.

The voter turnout to the primary was a lot of disappointment, considering that the voters in Kentucky just weren't interested. Maybe they're tired of politics and politics, or they're tired of having an election every year as do in Kentucky.

It's five long months between the primary and the general election in November and that seems entirely too long and an eternity to the voters.

Up until 1956 the primary in Kentucky was the first Saturday in August which was held in several state positions. It didn't leave but three months between the two elections. Sometimes primary campaign doesn't begin until late May, but it seems it is now under way.

If I remember who the election was moved back to May was mostly wrong. In 1923 only 48% thought that. In 1969, 60% stressed patriotism as an important personal value. In 1973 that figure had dropped to 42%.

precisely the same value orientations as their college peers. What the research does show is that non-college youth in 1973 were just about where the college population was in 1969. Yankelovich in his book "The New Moral Majority" points out the following examples which have taken place in the social values and moral outlook of the non-college majority from 1969 to 1973.

In 1969 a majority of non-college youth (57%) believed that casual premarital sex was morally wrong. In 1973 only one-third (38%) held that belief.

In 1969, almost two-thirds (64%) felt that abortion was morally wrong. In 1973 only 48% thought that.

keep a hand on mankind which shows you how far we have progressed since the eskimo.

The National Science Foundation has some advice to help you with the Peter principle. This is the condition that every organization will be occupied by someone incompetent to perform his duties.

The premise is based on the obvious. When a worker begins getting promoted he is not qualified to handle. And he stays, turning up the wrong answers for everyone, getting into ever deeper and deeper trouble. The Peter principle says that every man will rise to his full level of incompetence.

We have a habit of making government-paid executives to Europe and the French Riviera like any other man. They are not qualified to handle. And he stays, turning up the wrong answers for everyone, getting into ever deeper and deeper trouble. The Peter principle says that every man will rise to his full level of incompetence.

Pioneer Playhouse to open

The Pioneer Playhouse will launch its 27th season of "Straw Hat" season beginning June 16 and running through Aug. 30. There is a full season of fast-paced comedies that are of the good old variety variety, according to Eben Hanson, producer.

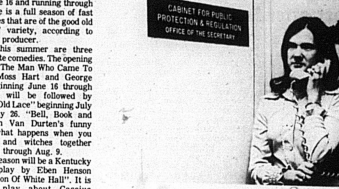

Scheduled this summer are three all-time favorite comedies. The opening attraction is "The Man Who Came To Dinner" by H. Hart and George Kaufman, beginning June 16 through July 26. This will be followed by "Arsenic and Old Lace" beginning July 7 through July 26. "Bell, Book and Candle" by Thornton Wilder, a funny farce about what happens when you mix mortals and angels together will run July 28 through Aug. 9.

Closing the season will be a Kentucky historical play by Eben Hanson, "The Lass of White Hall". It is an original play about Lassus Marcellus, Civil abolitionist, newspaper publisher, minister to Russia and friend to Abraham Lincoln. This historical drama will begin Aug. 11 through Aug. 30.

Dining under the stars will again be featured at the Playhouse's oldest outdoor and dinner theatre. Theatre tickets may be purchased with or without dinner. Pioneer Playhouse also has a fully equipped campground for recreation. Pioneer Playhouse has a swimming pool, lawn, and picnic grounds. Reservations, phone and gift shop.

Conservation play can be made by restoring Pioneer Playhouse, Danville, KY 4042, or phone 286-2707.
