Gill, trammel nets to become illegal

FRANKFORT—The state Fish and Wildlife Commission acted last week to eliminate gill and trammel nets as legal commercial fishing gear in all Kentucky waters except the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers and overflow lakes directly connected with those rivers.

The regulation will not become effective until Jan. 1, 1978, Commissioner Arnold Mitchell said, as that commercial fishermen will have one year to "phase out" their use of such nets.

The commission also upped the cost of commercial fishing licenses for both residents and non-residents, Mitchell said, but included in the new fees tags effective Jan. 1, 1978 will be 10 numbered tags for individual pieces of commercial fishing gear which formerly cost the fisherman up to $2.50 to $3.00 each, depending upon the type of equipment used and kind of license.

The new fees will be: resident commercial fishing license, $35 (formerly $16.50); Ohio River Commercial Fishing License (available only to residents of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois), $50 (formerly $16.50), and non-resident commercial fishing license, $100 (formerly $35.50). Additional books of 10 like-numbered tags (good on any type of commercial gear as specified by regulations and statute) will be available at $15 per block.

Residents and/or holders of Ohio River commercial licenses and at $40 per block for holders of non-resident commercial licenses.

The commission also approved the addition of the slat basket, or slat trap, to the list of commercial fishing equipment legal in all Kentucky commercial fishing waters effective as quickly as the regulation can be filed and processed. The baskets, or traps, must, however, be no larger than two feet in diameter or square end and have at least two openings between slats of 1 1/2" and there must be no cross-bracing that will restrict the length of those openings to less than eight inches.

The commission's decision to change the commercial fishing regulations was based on recommendations made by the director of fisheries, Charles C. Bowers, Mitchell said.

Bowers' reasons for elimination of gill and trammel nets were his findings that they pose a present and potential danger to the rockfish population; that the use of such nets has trapped the large desirable commercial fishes in the same small lakes and certain desirable target species, such as spottail in Lake Cumberland and flathead catfish in Nolich, causing a decline or potential decline in business profits; that they have not removed significant numbers of rough fish in Barkley and Kentucky Lakes because of lack of interest on the part of fishermen, and a lack of good market for carp and buffalo and have concentrated on the catfishes to the exclusion of other species; that their gear can harvest the catfishes without the drawbacks of gill and trammel nets and that the small market for buffalo and carp can be supplied by gill and trammel nets in the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers and by three-inch mesh hoop nets, wing nets etc. in other commercial waters.

South Central Bell seeks

month's time. If a customer makes four calls, he would be charged for the one call over the three-call allowance. The charge would be 20 cents. If he makes five calls, he would be charged 40 cents—20 cents for each of the two calls over the allowance.

"There are a number of exceptions to these charges," Harris said. "Customers unable to use the directory because of physical handicap will not be charged for DA calls, no matter how many they make. Neither will patients in hospitals, guests in hotels or motels, or customer requesting an out-of-state number."

The company decided to request approval of the new method of charging for Directory Assistance as a way of maintaining fairness in the rate structure in the light of changes in customer usage and the high costs of providing the service.

"A South Central Bell study of customer calls to DA showed that about one third of all customers do not make any calls to DA a given month," he said. "Another one third make three calls or less. The remaining one third calls made."

"This means that all customers are paying, through their monthly rates, for a service that is rarely used by one third of them. And the amount they are paying is growing, because the cost of providing this service is rising rapidly."

Harris said that operator costs for providing Directory Assistance service in Kentucky in 1974 were $4.1 million.

Poison Prevention

Week Mar. 16-22

FRANKFORT—Labor bearing the warning "toxic" or "poison" will not protect children from poisoning accidents or death.

Over 90 per cent of all poisoning accidents occur in the home and involve children under the age of five. The Department for Human Resources (DHR) states that 90 per cent of these accidents can be prevented.

Children at this stage are not likely to read, especially labels. However, they can run, reach, grab and are likely to be attracted by brightly colored labels. A red skull and bones with the word "poison" in red letters set against a yellow background on a can of pesticide may make the can look like a desirable toy.

The National Clearinghouse for Poison Centers estimates that over 4,000 children are poisoned from pesticides each year. Pesticides fall into four chemical categories: those used to control weeds, fungi, insects and rodents. DHR's office of Pesticides and Consumer Safety warns that all these products should be properly stored and not kept inside the house where lone larvae can escape.

All household products such as bleach, cleaning compounds and room deodorizers should be stored on the highest shelf of a utility closet. Cleaning and polishing agents rank next in the number of accidental poisonings reported.

Parents can observe Poison Prevention Week, March 16-22, by making some poisonous products used in the home and for the lawn and garden are out of the reach of young children. Further information on pesticides and poison prevention can be obtained from DHR's office of Pesticides and Consumer Safety, 564-4337.

Calls to Directory Assistance on an average basis have increased by 45 percent in the last five years. The company's request to begin charging 20 cents for local calls from coin telephones is another step which will let customers who use a service pay the costs of providing it, Harris said.

"When the 20 cent rate becomes effective, residence and business calls for local service would be reduced by 20 cents per line per month," he said. "The 10 cent rate for local coin telephone calls was established in 1952," Harris said. "Since then, the cost of a coin telephone itself has risen more than 90 percent. Telephone booths now cost four times what they did in 1952, and the price of a coin collector's vehicle has more than doubled. And, of course, the Consumer Price Index to up 95 percent since 1952," Harris said.

"It's clear the 10 cent rate is too low," he said. "And if the people who use coin service don't pay more for it, the prices for monthly services would have to be higher."

Young men, if you are 18 and not registered with selective service, do it promptly. Registration takes only a few minutes. It can be accomplished during a 30-day period beginning 30 days prior, or 30 days after attaining age 18. Selective service posters list registration locations in Nicholas county. If you are a student you may register at the Nicholas County High School in the office of the counselor. If you are not a student, you may register at First National Bank, Carlisle with Billy C. House on Monday thru Friday from 9:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m.
