SAY YOU SAW IT IN THE MERCURY

Dear Debbie
Letters to DEBORAH WHITE

DEAR DEBBIE:
I'm a 52-[illegible] widow, financially independent, considered attractive. Recently I met a wonderful man who wants to marry me. He is 35. The difference in age doesn't bother us but it disturbs a lot of people who shouldn't be involved in the first place. I have two married daughters who have done a good job of ignoring me for the past 10 years. As soon as they heard I wanted to remarry they haven't left me alone. They say he can't love me, he's after my money (he happens to have more than I do) and will make me miserable. I'm no dope, Debbie, and if anyone is after my money I think it's my daughters, plus the rest of the family that suddenly discovered I was alive again. I don't want a big fight at family hands but what can I say to get them off my back?
DETERMINED TO GO AHEAD

DEAR DETERMINED:
How about butt out? Your daughters' efforts to deprive you of the companionship they enjoy in their marriages seems very unfeeling, and I wouldn't be afraid to tell them so quite firmly.

Dear Debbie:
I'm at a loss convincing my husband that cleanliness is very important between a husband and wife. He doesn't take the time to keep himself clean or wear fresh clothes, and is very much of a B.O. person. He won't take my suggestions, such as I'll run the water for your bath, why not shave, etc. I even lay out clean clothes but he ignores them. It would please me to go out and enjoy ourselves but he doesn't want to get out of the house. He's 60 and I'm 61. What can I do?
Tired of Hinting

Dear Tired:
Stop hinting and start insisting. Refuse to sleep with him just for openers. Then tell him the house stays dirty as long as he does. And don't wait for permission to throw his dirty clothes into the washer. If his only choice lies between clean clothes and no clothes, you'll win.

YOU AND YOUR HEALTH by Peter J. Esse, M.D.

IMPORTANCE OF CONFIDENCE IN MD

Dear Dr. Esse: I go to a doctor who has the reputation of being one of the best. But try as I will, I have no confidence in him. I silently question whatever he says and whatever he does. Do you think this is a sufficient reason to look for another doctor?

I am not one to be changing doctors constantly. Until our family doctor died last year, we were his patients for over 20 years.—Mrs. G.

COMMENT: The cement that binds the physician-patient relationship is a big dose of confidence. Without it, you might as well have a robot treating you.

It is not always true that the doctor of great repute is "great" for every one of his patients. You have to believe in him if you expect to get the most out of what modern medicine has to offer.

One patient says, "My doctor is like a little god to me. Whatever he says, I'll do. I'd jump off a roof if he told me to."

Another patient, in reference to the identical doctor, says, "I would not let him treat my cat."

Patients' opinions vary. Some are based on prejudices. Others on simple, outright lack of confidence. Ask them why. They may not be able to tell you. As you have said, Mrs. G., "He's one of the best"—but you do not trust him.

You will have to make your own decision on whether or not to seek medical help elsewhere. But as a general rule I advise patients to look for another able doctor who inspires confidence. Otherwise it is not likely they will make an effective patient-doctor team.

I've even advised some of my own patients who lacked confidence in me to try another doctor. Patients who don't completely "believe in you" are better off with another physician who inspires trust and hope.

• • •

Dear Dr. Esse: What's good for my leg cramps?—Mr. O.

COMMENT: Even before attempting to guess, I'd have to know much more about you. How old are you? When do they come on? How often?

Some patients get leg cramps because they have bad arches. Others, because their leg circulation is bad (varicose veins; arteries in legs partially or completely clogged by atherosclerosis). Still others, for no apparent reason. Occasionally they have to jump out of bed because a cramp comes on.

If you suffer from intermittent claudication (having to stop often while walking because of severe leg cramps), you'll need special X rays and other tests to get at the reason for your trouble. As you see, diagnosis is important.

• • •

For Mr. K.: Doctors, disagree. When they do, the frustrated patient must make his choice. I happen to be on the side of doctors who believe that pipes and cigars are as harmful as cigarettes. In spite of arguments to the contrary, people do inhale when smoking pipes or cigars. At least I did before I gave up all tobacco about 10 years ago.

• • •

For Mrs. D.: Married or single, it is advisable for a grown woman to have yearly Pap tests.
