Communication Strengthens the Family Unit
 Real communication is more than just conversation; it is a mutual sharing of ideas, feelings, attitudes, needs and goals—a complex process of revealing yourself to another person while simultaneously allowing that other person reveal himself to you. Thus, if family members talk at each other, without listening, they do not communicate no matter how many words are spoken.

INCOME TAX REBATES HAVE NO EFFECT ON FOOD STAMP ELIGIBILITY
 ATLANTA, GA.—The eligibility of food stamp recipients will not be affected by the income tax rebates or special payments provided for in the Tax Reduction Act of 1975, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Food and Nutrition Service.

Real communication helps family members solve problems together. Many problems involved in child rearing, finances, personality differences, role changes and the like can be overcome by communication and mutual effort which would otherwise seem insurmountable, and possibly lead to family disorganization and break-up.

Some Suggestions: Communication is a skill that must be learned and continuously practiced. Here are some suggestions to facilitate family communication.

- Provide the time. Although communication should take place continuously, it is important to schedule a special time family members can share in a relaxed atmosphere. This helps build a habit of positive communication.
- Be honest. Each family member needs to get to know themselves and each other more in order to build sincere and honest communication. If family members do not respect and accept another's right to communicate their inner needs and feelings, then true communication is inhibited.
- Don't interrupt. Interruptions are obvious hindrances to communication, yet some of us continually display such lack of courtesy and respect for the other person's point of view.
- Listen. Too often we hear words, but don't really take the time to listen with an "inner ear" to the intent of the communication.
- Don't jump to conclusions. Previous assumptions or prejudices often put the other person on the defensive, hindering common understanding.
- Don't take attention. Pretending to listen when not really interested almost certainly inhibits understanding. In addition, it is a non-verbal message that conveys lack of concern.
- Seek a true dialogue. Not only should you attempt to send clear messages, but you should also seek feedback from the receiver so that you are sure the message is interpreted as intended.
