Center to be one of nation's finest; arena one of largest

Kentuckians accustomed to traveling to cities for big-name entertainment and sports events will soon have no further to look than Lexington for one of the nation's finest civic center complexes.

The $46 million Lexington Center now under construction in downtown Lexington will give central Kentucky for the first time a truly first-class facility for entertainment, sports and convention business.

Dominating the complex will be Rupp Arena with its seating capacity of over 22,000 persons. When it opens in the fall of 1976, it will be the new home of the University of Kentucky basketball Wildcats.

Other features of the Lexington Center project include a convention-exhibition hall, retail mall, hotel and reconstructed 19th century opera house.

Rupp Arena was recently named after Adolph Rupp, Kentucky's legendary coach who spent 41 seasons at the helm of the Wildcats while compiling the winningest record in the history of college basketball.

Its seating capacity will make it one of the nation's largest arenas. Kentucky now plays its home games in 11,500 seat Memorial Coliseum.

In addition to basketball, Rupp Arena will be adaptable for every imaginable kind of sporting or entertainment event, including ice shows, tennis, track, circuses, and popular and classical concerts.

Surrounding Rupp Arena will be a 70,000-square foot retail mall, a 70,000-square foot convention-exhibition hall, and a hotel with 350-400 rooms.

The retail mall will feature speciality shops of a very high quality and will be completely enclosed. Since Lexington is famous for its horse farms, interior design of the mall will highlight the horse industry with murals, displays of racing colors, a sculpture, paddock, and barn paneling on shops.

The convention-exhibition hall will be accessible from the mall, Rupp Arena and the hotel. It will have meeting rooms of various sizes for state, regional and national conventions.

The hotel will be leased to a major operator and will provide convenient lodging for visitors to Lexington Center.

Rupp Arena, the retail mall, the hotel and convention-exhibition hall will be connected by enclosed passageways. Thus, a visitor to Lexington Center will be able to go from one facility to another in completely climatized comfort.

Originally built in 1887, Lexington's Opera House attracted the most famous stage personalities of its day. It is now undergoing a virtual reconstruction, adhering as closely as possible to original specifications. Great care is being taken to recreate the plush, elegant atmosphere of the old Opera House.

The Opera House will serve as a center for the visual and performing arts and will seat 1,110 persons on the main floor and two balconies.

Tom Minter, general manager and executive director of Lexington Center, has been involved in the project for several years. Until March 1, he was general manager of Convention Center in Louisville, but had been a consultant to the Lexington Center.

"As a consultant, I put many of my ideas into the design of the facility," he said. "We visited complexes of similar scope across the nation in gathering ideas for the project. I believe the Lexington Center will rank among the very best in the nation for facilities of this type."

Lexington had plans, wishes and hopes for a downtown civic center for over 50 years. The dream became reality in June of 1974 when groundbreaking ceremonies were held for Lexington Center.

Since then, structural steel for Rupp Arena has climbed dramatically over the Lexington skyline to its height of an eleven-story building. Foundation work for the retail mall and convention-exhibition hall is well along, as is reconstruction of the Opera House.

Lexington Center is being developed by Lexington Center Corporation (LCC), a non-profit corporation guided by an eleven member citizens board of directors. LCC was authorized by the Urban County Government of Lexington and Fayette county.

The complex is being built with a mix of public and private funds. LCC will operate Rupp Arena, the exhibition hall and Opera House, and will lease the retail mall and hotel to private enterprise groups.

An elaborate scale model of Lexington Center, built at a cost of nearly $20,000 was unveiled in Lexington recently, giving the community a visual idea of what the civic center will be like.

Kay's Kitchen

By Kay Fisher

Well the taxes have been paid and you have either reached the stage of tightening your belt to recover or, it seems such a lost cause you just say what's the use! Either way, one must eat.

If you are in the belt tightening group try this for a good one dish meal. Let me add this now—you are the cook and know the size of your family and if they are light eaters or have good healthy appetites. Most casseroles serve from six to eight. If you find you need more, add another potato or two or any other vegetable that may be in the casserole. If you add more vegetables, that of course would call for a bit more seasoning.

HAMBURGER CASSEROLE

Mix about 1½ pounds of hamburger, 1 egg, 1½ teaspoons seasoned salt, 2 teaspoons Worchestershire sauce, ½ cup fine bread crumbs, ¼ cup of water (more or less, a lot depends on how much fat is in the hamburger. Anyway enough to make a nice light mixture.) Shape into desired size meatballs. Brown over medium heat in heavy-skillet, then place in casserole.

Pour off all but about two tablespoons of the fat from skillet. Add 2 teaspoons margarine and two cans of beef gravy.

Peal six or eight small carrots, six or eight small white onions and same number of small potatoes or you can use larger potatoes cut in quarters. Here is where you can add more vegetables. Cook vegetables in boiling salted water 15 or 20 minutes. Drain and add to casserole. Bring gravy and margarine to boil and pour over top of vegetables. Top, with can of drained mushrooms. Cover and bake one hour at 350 degrees.

When ready to serve sprinkle finely chopped parsley over all.

Serve with bread of your choice. A congealed fruit salad, a tossed salad with oil and vinegar dressing, and your favorite cake or pie for dessert.

If there are only two persons to be fed and this seems a lot of food to have on hand, invite a couple or two to eat with you. Company makes the simplest meal taste better. And company should not mean a lot of extra work and expense. After all it is the companionship of your friends that is important.

For those of you who have asked for the Oil and Vinegar Dressing recipe, here it is.

OIL AND VINEGAR DRESSING

⅓ cup vinegar
⅔ cup olive oil
½ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon sugar

Mix all ingredients in small deep bowl and mix well. I use a bottle with wide mouth and a good tight screw top. It needs a good shaking before using each time.

Do use pure olive oil. For other salad dressings and to marinate, use vegetable oil, but for this do use imported olive oil for best results.

WHAS Crusade site is changed due to unions

After 21 years of origination from Louisville's Memorial Auditorium, the WHAS Crusade for Children will be moved to the stations' studios for the May 17 and 18 telecast.

The change in location is brought about by the failure of Auditorium management and Stagehands Union Local No. 17 to reach a contract agreement. An offer by Memorial's management to permit a one-weekend moratorium was not accepted by the union, and the pressure of time made the WHAS decision to move necessary.

"Because of the weeks it takes to set up the staging of such a massive production as the Crusade, we just are not able to wait any longer—hoping for a settlement," stated Jim Walton, Executive Producer of the Crusade for Children. "Our biggest regret is that there will be little or no room at the WHAS studios for an audience."

"Whatever the complications, I am sure of one thing, the people of Kentuckiana will understand the situation and the somewhat different look to the Crusade show. Crusade supporters have suffered recessions, tornadoes, all kinds of difficulties, and through it all, they have proved their concern for the handicapped youngsters of this area by their giving. I am sure a location change will not stop that spirit of caring."

Mr. Walton also said he will announce in a week or so the exact plans for Crusade production as well as traffic patterns for the fire trucks and contributors coming to the station on Sunday.
