Editor's notebook

by Albert Dix

According to the president of Boston University, John R. Silbur, Kentucky ranks eleventh in the nation in the amount of money, per student, appropriated by the General Assembly for higher education.

Mr. Silbur points this, and other spending statistics for higher education, out in an article written for the May issue of Atlantic Monthly.

For the fiscal year of 1974-75, Mr. Silbur's figures show Kentucky appropriates $12.58 for every $1,000 of personal income of all Kentuckians, and that places the state 14th in the country in that comparison.

These are two achievements, and they are good marks for a state which has a multiplicity of problems in funding education.

We can be proud of those figures, until we check some other figures relating to elementary and secondary education, and they show Kentucky ranks 48th in the nation in the amount appropriated by the legislature for students in grade and high schools.

We can only hang our heads when we look at that level of support for the younger students. This unequal and unjust emphasis will continue unless the 1976 General Assembly responds to a citizen effort to put a more equal emphasis on all levels of education in the state.

If it does not, the probability is that high school students entering the states colleges and universities will be under-educated, and unable to do college-level work. Or, colleges and universities will have to adjust, downward, their standards for attaining a college diploma.

This assures, of course, that money is the key to a better educational system. It is not the only factor but far and away the most important.

According to Mr. Silbur, the legislature's appropriation for higher education students is $2,676. For the same time period, and based on the average daily attendance of students in elementary and secondary education, the legislature appropriates only $533 per student.

Johnson-Mathers Nursing Home will hold an Open House this Sunday, May 11, starting at 1 p.m. in observance of National Nursing Home Week, May 11-17. Refreshments will be served from 2 to 3:30. These residents are being recognized at the nursing home. From left, Stanley Dwelly, youngest resident; Mrs. Annie Clark, who has been a resident the longest period of time; Miss Cordia Bell, oldest; standing, Mrs. Elizabeth Tedder, having the most grandchildren—six children, 22 grandchildren, 57 great-grandchildren, 13 great-great-grandchildren.—Hopkins photo

That's five-to-one in favor of the colleges and universities, and it is not only unfair, but unrealistic.

The state Department of Education says Kentucky ranks 26th in per capita spending for higher education (so does Mr. Silbur), and 47th in the nation in per capita spending for grade and high school students.

If the General Assembly doesn't do a complete shift of emphasis over the next few years and give more equal treatment, the colleges and universities in Kentucky are going to have a sizeable group of poorly equipped, dumbbells in their freshmen classes.

This imbalance in state appropriations has come about because the college and university presidents are far better lobbyists than the poorly-organized rabble which speaks for the state's teachers and elementary and secondary educational system.

The men in higher education have the experience of government service, the finesse and charm to persuade. They have spoken softly but in the right places, touched the right spots, argued with logic and reason, and put the state's higher education system in a very high plateau.

This was their job, their responsibility, and what their regents demanded. But they must be noticing, with some alarm, the year-by-year declines in the reading and writing abilities of incoming students. They cannot ignore the growing number of colleges and universities which have established remedial classes for students who come to them unprepared for college work.

Higher education officials must continue to lobby for their schools but they must, as must all citizens of Kentucky and the members of the General Assembly, pay more heed to the cries for equal emphasis in state spending for education.

In his Atlantic Monthly article, Mr. Silbur says: "The achievement of equal opportunity in a democratic society requires that no qualified student be denied an education because he cannot pay, and any college or group of colleges that restricted education to those who could pay for its cost would betray a fundamental ideal of democracy by limiting education to the affluent."

Relating this to Kentucky's imbalance in state spending for all levels of education, Silbur's words could be changed to this:

The achievement of equal opportunity in a democratic society requires that no student be denied an education because he is poorly prepared at the local level, and any college or group of colleges that restricted education to those who can do college-level work would betray a fundamental ideal of democracy by limiting education to the few achievers who will graduate from the state's high schools.

'Is there hunter' no crank call

FRANKFORT—The telephone will ring at least once in 3,000 Kentucky households sometime between May 12 and 22.

If yours is one of those 3,000 phones, don't hang up when the caller, a woman, asks: "Is there a hunter in your household?"

It won't be a prank and there won't be an idiot on the other end of your receiver, either.

The call will simply be a part of the Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources' annual telephone survey, one phase of an effort to determine how much game was harvested by Kentucky hunters during last year's hunting season.

If there isn't a "hunter in your household" the caller will thank you and hang up.

Should you answer yes, however, she'll ask you to cooperate with the Department by filling out a brief questionnaire about the number of hunting trips, kinds and numbers of game killed.

The questionnaires will be mailed from the Game Management Division and, the information gleaned from them will help biologists in recommending lengths of future seasons and bag and possession limits.

All calls will be made between 5 and 9 p.m.

School lunch financing being reviewed by USDA

Kentucky school officials soon will know exactly how much it costs to produce a lunch at school, according to C.E. Bevins, director of the division of school food services, state Department of Education.

He explained that the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) will reimburse local districts on a per-meal basis for the actual cost of operating their food service programs. Bevins added that although the federal guidelines are tentatively scheduled for July, 1976, most Kentucky school districts should be ready to implement the new cost accounting procedures this fall.

Presently, Kentucky and most other states reimburse local districts at the announced average rate per meal.

School food service program costs in Kentucky are so diverse that one school district may spend 60 cents per lunch, while another district's cost may be 66 cents per meal. Standards for determining meal costs also vary.

Regulations set up by the USDA require that each school district be reimbursed no more than the actual cost of operating school food service programs.

"When the new financing requirement becomes mandatory, a district designating 60 cents as its meal cost will receive that exact amount. And, if a district can prove that its food costs are greater than the state average, the difference will be given to that program if funds are available.

"The beautiful part of this new procedure is that boards that previously have not determined meal costs are now permitted to do so," said Bevins. He explained that new USDA regulations permit use of "hidden" costs, since districts keep records of the amount spent for food, supplies, labor, equipment depreciation, purchasing services and overhead—the total expenses involved in a school lunch program.

Explicit directions are enumerated in a USDA handbook, a part of which states, "The system must be consistent and uniform, although it crosses cafeteria and district lines. Only in this manner can local, state and federal officials make valid comparisons between entities over long periods of time."

Bevins said that the Kentucky staff was providing excellent leadership in gearing up for the new program and that it continues to be a voluntary decision on the part of local districts as to when the new procedures would be put into effect.
