Kentucky reflections

by George Street Boone

Commitment is a popular word in political rhetoric at this time and many persons have serious questions about our obligations toward the Vietnamese and Cambodians.

Have Kentuckians pledged or promised to provide food, shelter, medical care and a place of refuge for those Indochinese refugees, some 150,000 of whom are estimated to be in this country or enroute? If they are distributed proportionately, Kentucky's share might approximate 3,000 persons.

Mr. Ford urges the citizens of this country to welcome these unfortunate people, while there is a strong and vocal hostile reaction from many intelligent and well-educated citizens. Members of Congress report mail from home has been strongly anti-refugee.

This nation was founded by persons who were refugees from another continent, the systems of government of which were not to be endured by them. In the 19th Century, our great spaces and the vast unsettled areas provided opportunities for those poor huddled masses yearning to be free described so poignantly by Emma Lazarus. Those lines from her poem were inscribed upon the base of the Statue of Liberty, given to the American People by the school children of France.

The refugees of war are different in so many ways from the immigrants of a century ago, and our conditions are so changed, should it be surprising that we do not know what our responsibilities really are? Are they seeking a culture which will permit them to become independent sturdy democratic citizens, or do they seek but a haven? Do they want to be assimilated? The accounts received of departures of these refugees have not made one proud.

The scope of the problem is certainly not overwhelming, if this country felt a moral obligation to accept it. The President's request for $507 million for their care is reported on the same page of a daily paper which discusses the Defense Department's $29.8 billion request for new weapons.

Kentucky was a frontier society and the pioneer recognized those requirements of independence, initiative and imagination were essential for survival. He also knew he must on occasion make sacrifices for his fellows.

The winding down of this unpopular war has left many uncertain as to what this nation should do.

In a society such as ours, the individual must accept his responsibilities before he can discharge them effectively. Can it be argued that here in Kentucky the responsibility for 3,000 refugees has been accepted? Has faith been broken if the refugees are not taken in?

Do our Christian ideals demand this of us? I wish I knew.

Frog season opens today

A 179-day frog season opens in Kentucky May 15.

The season runs through midnight Oct. 31. Frogs can be harvested with bow and arrow or firearm on a hunting license, by pole and line on a fishing license, or by gig or hand with either license. The limit is 15 frogs per hunting day, which runs from noon to noon. The possession limit is 30 frogs after two or more days of frogging. No more than 15 frogs can be in possession in the field.

Most waters around Kentucky support frogs. Farm ponds and seldom frequented streams are considered the best places to catch frogs, though public lakes may be frogged.

Most frog hunters take the amphibian by gig, though bow and arrow hunting is said to be the most sporting method. When hunting with a firearm, .22 shot shell is considered the best ammunition. The most sophisticated frog hunter usually takes his prey by hand. During the day to take a frog with pole and line, a hook can be baited with red flannel and swung near the frog's head until the frog jumps for the hook.

Frog hunting is thought to be best during moonless nights, when frogs will hold to a light. A six to 12 volt light is used for frog hunting.

Frog hunters should ask the owner's permission before entering private land.
