Here we are again wondering what to do with those bits of left-over turkey, or what you have left over. You may feel you never want another bite of turkey again. Unless there is really something to justify freezing a good size portion whole, I would suggest making a casserole and freezing for use later. Six months from now it would be nice to have a meal practically ready just by thawing.

HOT TURKEY 'N' CHIPS
 2 cups cooked turkey (or chicken)
 1/2 cup finely diced celery
 1/2 cup chopped almonds
 2 teaspoons salt
 2 tablespoons grated onion
 2 tablespoons lemon juice
 1 cup mayonnaise
 1/2 cup grated cheddar cheese
 1 cup crushed potato chips
 Combine all ingredients except cheese and potato chips. Spoon lightly into individual buttered custard cups or one large baker. Sprinkle with cheese and chips. Bake in hot oven at 425 degrees until heated through.

Pesticide applicators must be certified
Statewide spray school

The second annual Kentucky Spray School will be held Jan. 5 and 6 at the Hopkinsville Community College in Hopkinsville, according to an announcement made by Chris Christensen, extension entomologist with the Entomology Department of the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture.

A federal regulation has been enacted requiring every user of restricted use pesticides to be certified before they can apply to pesticides. Such persons must be certified by October of 1971. All commercial chemical applicators must pass an examination before they can be certified and be able to attend a spray school to obtain the subject knowledge to pass the certification test.

He said the annual spray schools have two objectives. "The first is to present the latest and more advanced technology in the application of the chemicals," Christensen said, "the information being aimed primarily at those who will be applying the restricted use chemicals on a far hire basis."

"The second objective is to get such people certified," he continued. "A lot of commercial applicators in Kentucky are already certified—but for those who are not, this is an opportunity for them to get specific instruction so that they can take a certification examination after which they will legally be able to apply the pesticides."

Christensen said instruction and examinations will be given to cover a number of different categories, including agricultural plant pest control, agricultural animal pest control, regulatory pest control, public health pest control, aerial application of chemicals, demonstration and research, aquatic weed control, and ornamental and turf pest control. "At this school we want to emphasize the lawn care aspect in the ornamental and turf category," he said. "The category will be directed in particular to those applicators who provide services specifically for lawn and turf needs and for persons such as golf course superintendents."
