

'Come Alive Singers' in concert

The Cincinnati Bible College "Come Alive Singers" will present a concert of sacred music at the Carlisle Christian Church Saturday, July 27, at 7 p.m.

Come Alive Singers have traveled coast to coast on three month tours inviting people everywhere to "come alive" to abundant, eternal living through Jesus Christ.

The concert will include a variety of music proclaiming liberty and life.

Prayer breakfast at Wesley Chapel

The members of Wesley Chapel CME Church will sponsor a Prayer Breakfast on Sunday, Aug. 1, at 7 a.m.

Rev. Ben Pumphrey, minister of First Christian Church will give the prayer meditation.

This will be the final service at Wesley for the Conference Year 1974-75. Breakfast will be served by the Ladies Auxiliaries of the church.

Martin M. McGuffey Jr. is pastor of the Wesley Church.

during the American Bicentennial. One of the team members will present a brief message.

One of the singers is Chris Mahan, son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel J. Mahan, of Hillsboro, Ohio. Mr. Mahan, a former, Helen Ruth Murrell, was born in Carlisle and attended school here.

Chris was born in Richmond, Calif., and lived most of his life in Washington, D.C. where his father worked for the Pentagon. The Mahan family moved to Hillsboro, Ohio in 1971 where Chris finished high school and now is in his second year of college majoring in music.

This summer he has traveled with the Come Alive Singers since May 17, performing in a different city every day.

The public is invited to attend.

Water Sports

Bliegl are fun for everyone. Bass anglers may bowl and trout fishermen may sport, but when all the ballots are in, the result is decisive. America's favorite fish is that multi-colored slink of fury, the bluegill.

Wherever you are, this scrappy fighter can be counted on when nothing else bites.

Scrappy "If bluegill got to weigh five pounds, they'd be harder to land than whale," says a friend of mine, in a true tribute to their fighting ability.

The bluegill is noble fish in my book and a golden plaater of them will grace any table. Yet, if the bluegill had no other claim to fame, the fact that it has provided so many youngsters with the thrill that can only come from catching a fish, will place it in the "Fish Hall of Fame."

They are found throughout most of the United States, from bobbing brooks to tumbling rivers, in small farm ponds and in all reservoirs.

The first fish I ever caught was a bluegill, and I began the same fish for a majority of fishermen in the country. They are a beginner's fish, willing to hit almost any time and capable of being caught with the most primitive of equipment.

This fish is tailor-made for the cane pole and small hook combination. Add a float, which can be a stopper out of a bottle, and you have a floating cork for the kids. Cover a youngster who wasn't intrigued by a brooding cork? Neither have I.

I took my young anglers, Craig and Cindy, bluegill fishing last week at Rough River. About 40 of the barman fighters were caught in a few hours. The kids had a ball, and I must admit, so did Dad.

It's unfortunate that so many fishermen get hung up on the complexities of bass, trout and walleye fishing and forget the childhood pleasures of bluegill fishing.

The bluegill is so prolific that Kentucky has no size or creel limits. In fact, more should be caught for better fish balance in most waters. Each female lays from 2,000 to 40,000 eggs, spawning when the water temperature reaches around 80.

Members of the sunfish family, they vary widely in color according to the character of the water they inhabit. The color ranges from pale blue to bright orange. The big males are so dark that they appear black.

The world record for bluegill, four pounds, 12 ounces, is comparable to a nine foot man. That outside creature was caught in Alabama in 1956. A string of bass and walleye fishing and fishing is very good, a 15-ounce fish is exciting and a one pounder is a linker.

Sometimes fish turn up that top the pound mark, but my hope of finding such monsters in batches has been in vain.

Kentucky reflections

Edkins
By George Street Boone

The controversy between the Kentucky Press Association and the State Board of Education over the censorship of the salaries of individual public school teachers has surfaced again.

That is proper government policy in this situation?

Since 1968 a statute has required all public officers who receive and disburse public funds, with certain exceptions as those whose records are audited, to publish annually. Heretofore, the statements of receipts and disbursements, newspapers are required to publish these at rates fixed by statute.

Teachers have sought for years to have publishers since May 17, 1974, performing in a different city every day.

The Legislature passed such an exception in 1972, but the Governor vetoed it.

The 1974 Legislature passed an amendment to include the mandatory publication of individual teacher's compensation and the Governor approved it.

In an interpretation of the 1974 statute, Assistant Attorney General Charles Runyon advised the State Board of Education that individual sums paid to public school teachers need no longer be published in financial statements.

Teachers' spokesmen have steadfastly maintained that revealing what each is paid demoralizes the teacher because the salary is so low.

The KEA, an organization to improve public education and to speak for the interests of the teaching profession, published a bulletin in June showing how Kentucky ranks in educational matters. According to the bulletin, the estimated average salary of public school teachers in Kentucky for 1973-74 was $9778, placing Kentucky 46th among the 50 states. According to their figures this showed a percentage increase of 6.7% in the past decade, placing Kentucky 22nd among the states in percent of increase. The estimated average salary of instructional staff for 1973-74 was $10,135, ranking Kentucky 44th.

These rankings are before the increases granted in the 1973-74 biennial budget.

Mr. Runyon observed that the exempting of the teacher salaries from the disclosure required of other public workers is at variance with the general principle but it is a policy determination of the Legislature. He pointed out the local School Boards may have accessible for public scrutiny factual lists of individual salaries. Newspapers may publish the salaries as news items.

Recalling President Washington's injunction that it is essential that public opinion should be enlightened, can one perceive a distinction why teachers' salaries should not be given publicity while those of every other public employee must be? Has the attention of the past decade hindered the new teachers' salaries? Have they

New coal refining facility to be implemented

FRANKFORT—A contract for the design and engineering of a solvent coal refining facility in Kentucky which, when completed, will cost an estimated $150 million.

Governor Julian M. Carroll and Michael D. Dignam, president of Wheelabrator-Frye, Inc., headquartered at Harrogate, N.C., in a joint statement, announced that an initial $5 million contract for the design and engineering was signed by the Kentucky Center for Energy Research and Wheelabrator.

Coal refining, known industrially as the Solvent Refined Coal process (SRC), was developed to derive an environmentally acceptable clean fuel from coal. The clean fuel can be produced in either liquid or solid form. Initially, the new plant will be designed to process 2,000 tons of Kentucky coal per day.

The first phase of the project will be the engineering, environmental/economic studies and site design, and prepare for the start of construction. Once in the process of construction, Wheelabrator and its subsidiary, The Rust Engineering Company, will construct and operate the facility. At that stage, Wheelabrator has agreed to make a financial commitment of up to $30 million for the project.

State personnel working 10 hour days

FRANKFORT, Ky.—Employees of the State Department of Personnel working four 10-hour days per week on a trial basis are satisfied with the new system, according to Eddie Stokley, department commissioner.

"We voted on the system before it was implemented and about 95 percent of the employees were in favor of it," said Commissioner Stokley. "If you took another vote on whether to keep the system I'm sure the percentage would be the same."

During July and August half of the department's employees are working Monday through Thursday and half are working Tuesday through Friday from 7:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. The system, if considered successful, may be implemented throughout all state government offices.

Stokley, who is to file a report with the governor at the end of August on the trial work schedule, said, "If I were to make the report right now I would advise keeping the system."
