ASK FOR CREDENTIALS OF PERSONS IDENTIFYING THEMSELVES AS IRS EMPLOYEES

LOUISVILLE—The Internal Revenue Service has cautioned taxpayers to request identification of all persons identifying themselves as IRS employees.

Harold Metz, Chief of Collection for IRS in Kentucky, explained that from time to time unscrupulous individuals have posed as employees of the IRS to extort money for what these imposters refer to as unpaid taxes. In advising taxpayers to ask for IRS credentials, Metz pointed out that, "Each of our public contact employees carries identification, and as a matter of routine, these persons are required to identify themselves when conducting official business."

Many of these bills will never reach the floor for a vote for they simply are not good bills. The committee will then be asked to pass the bills. This is where much of the work is supposed to be done. There just isn't any sensible reason why a whole floor of bills should go to the floor to occupy the legislative time and then be killed by a vote. There just isn't that much time in the allotted 60 days prescribed by Kentucky's Constitution.
A great many of these bills are duplicates, the same subject matter introduced in the House and in the Senate. These are known as duplicate bills. The sponsor of the measure gets a friend in the other branch to introduce the bill for him. The hope is that at least one of them will obtain final passage.
Then, there are a large number of bills relating to the same subject matter. Many times the committee will come up with a committee substitute containing the best features of two or more bills dealing with the same subject matter. This lessens the number of bills that reach the floor for action.
The standard by which the legislature should be judged is the quality of the legislation that reaches final approval and not the number of bills that reach the floor for a vote. A great amount of the time of the legislature is spent in committee sifting through the bills and weeding out bad proposals.
The real work of the legislature goes through the process of the governor's budget and the legislation that implements it. The governor's program, as it is called, is where the important bills are to be found. Many bills are called "housekeeping" bills. These are ones that are required to update present law or to implement federal legislation.
The Equal Rights Amendment that the legislature has been handling over is one in the latter category. In a special session in 1972, the Kentucky legislature passed a resolution approving this federal amendment. Now there are many women who want this restricted even though they are doubtful that such action is constitutional. It's a hot political issue with the legislature and their re-election in some areas may depend upon what they do this session on it.
The governor's budget bill probably will clear both houses this week, and then the tempo of floor action really will pick up.
